SUMMARY.

Rome is gaily bedecked in honour of the Italian victory over the Austrians in the Trentino.

The Italians captured positions which the Austrians had taken three months to conquer.

The Austrian advance was broken in a single day, and a rout began.

The enemy's only chance was instant retreat, otherwise between the Posina and Asiago they would have been annihilated.

Hundreds of new and big guns in the last few days opened a tremendous fire on both Austrian wings.

A Vienna communique says: To safeguard full freedom of action, we shortened our front between the Brenta and the Adige.

A German night attack on the French position west of Thiaumont completely failed.

A German communique says: The enemy's night attack westward of Mort Homme failed before our machine-guns and artillery.

The British carried out a number of successful night raids, and penetrated hostile lines at 10 different places.

The Munster Fusiliers and the Anzacs were particularly successful in the raids.

There has been a good deal of artillery work on both sides. The German trenches were damaged in many places.

It is officially stated in Petrograd that the Russians have approached the passes leading to Transylvania.

Telegrams received in Rome announce the fact that the Russians have penetrated the province of Transylvania.

The Russians on the Kovel front advanced 45 miles in 10 days, until the new enemy formations compelled them to slow down.

They were forced to defend themselves against attacks by superior numbers, including German troops from the western front.

Verdun prisoners state that the German Emperor intended to send seven German corps to Kovel if necessary to retake Lutsk.

The Russians have repulsed many Turkish night attacks in the Trebizond sector.

A Turkish offensive in the direction of Baghdad was repulsed by the Russians, who inflicted severe losses on the enemy.

A Turkish communique claims to have routed the enemy on the Caucasus front.

The Sultan of Johore has presented to the British Government a squadron of aeroplanes costing £31,500.

The House of Commons has agreed to the proposed memorial, at the public expense, to the late Lord Kitchener.

It is feared that Lord Lansdowne, Mr. Walter Long, and Lord Robert Cecil will follow Lord Selborne into retirement.

Mr. Hughes has already purchased fifteen good serviceable modern cargo steamers for the transport of Australian wheat.

It is considered likely that the annual leave of members of the Public Service will be restored.

The next batch of wounded and sick Australian soldiers will disembark at Newcastle on Thursday morning.

Archbishop Donaldson is of opinion that the treaty of peace, when signed, will differ from all former treaties.

The governing factor will be, he says, not the interests of class or dynasty, but the will of the people.

In the suit brought by Mr. Griffith against a hotel licensee for alleged slander, the evidence for the defence was concluded.

WARM FLANNEL PYJAMAS

IN TWO POPULAR WEIGHTS.

Peapes' Pyjamas conduce to comfortable sleep, not only because the materials are soft and seasonable, but because the garments are cut to correct proportions. They are designed by our own cutters, and made in our own workrooms, and are therefore always uniform.

For the cold nights of Winter we commend especially two weights of flannel. Ceylon for men who prefer medium weight, and Crimean for those who like heavy pyjamas.

CEYLON FLANNEL, in Grey grounds, with neat stripes .... 16/6 PER SUIT.

CRIMEAN FLANNEL, Grey, Fawn, and Green grounds, with coloured stripes .... 21/ PER SUIT.

The materials are of the Peapes' quality standard, and could not be quoted at the above prices to-day but for our early contracting.

Serious advances have since been made in all prices of flannel goods. Early ordering is advisable.

WE PAY POSTAGE.

Please state chest and waist measurements.

MOTOR CARS, BICYCLES, ETC.

A NEW CAR depreciates from one-third to one-half the first year. A good guaranteed rebuilt car, bought at the right price, is a profitable investment, that after years of service only shows a low rate of depreciation. We have rebuilt and soiled cars that have had very little use going for half or less than half their original cost, and are good for years of use. We have sold hundreds of cars and can refer you to satisfied clients throughout the country.
We are not dealers in cars in the ordinary sense, as we do not buy second-hand cars.
We have some of the best of new European and American cars on hand for sale, and could arrange to take your small car as part payment.
Should you write or call in and see us, we would be pleased to supply you with Price Lists of all these cars. Some we can sell on terms.

BUY PALMER CORD TYRES NOW.
Heavy transport charges, and the military demand for tyres, will assuredly affect prices. Motorists would be well advised to look to their tyres now, and effect renewals if necessary—always remembering that the Palmer Cord Tyre gives best service on bad roads, because it resists strain, and is impervious to moisture. Moreover, it is an all-British Tyre. That also should count. Interesting catalogue free.

NOTICES.

The "Herald's" Page for Women is published on Wednesdays.

Communications should be addressed to "The Editor, 'A Page for Women,' 'Herald' Office."

HEALTH IN MIDDLE AGE.

Setting aside women who have some organic trouble of a nature which proclaims itself more and more openly as middle age comes on, it has been observed of women in general that their health has improved. It is no longer the correct thing to be an invalid. Of course, since our wounded have come back to claim our attention and sympathy, the role of "interesting invalid" has been transferred from one sex to the other; but even before the war came to take up the greater part of our thoughts and activities, the once-dreaded climacteric was fading out as the bogey which used to terrify all women no longer young.

That one's health should "fail" or "break-down" somewhere between 40 and 50 seemed at one time as inevitable as that one's hair should turn grey, or that, with most people, glasses were necessary. The belief seems to have been a kind of superstition; one of the many strange [illegible] which clustered around women's physical nature. It is enlightening, and a little bewildering, to see how many of these old creeds are going by the board now. One of the most cherished articles of faith was that no woman could possibly be in good health all through her middle-age. Women were told so; they believed it; they had, as a rule, very little to do at that age, and consequently they fell ill as a matter of course, and rushed down the steep descent into a querulous old age, making themselves an unmitigated nuisance to all their dear relations.

We have to thank very greatly women doctors for the immense uplifting of women's ideas about their own physiology. Just now at our own university there are more women medical students than there ever were before. Since the war began, an impetus has been given to the study of medicine by women because the women doctors have been able to do so much good work, and to fill so many gaps, that they may be said to have added greatly to the prestige of the professional woman. A woman with expert professional knowledge is able to speak to other women about matters of health with a convincing authority which a man cannot possess.

A book of medical advice to women, written, say, 70 years ago, by a masculine physician, is apt to be quaint reading. The polite writer treats his subject as if a woman were a piece of fragile biscuit china, ready to fall to pieces and break at a touch. A glance at any manual of health, penned by a medical woman of to-day, is brisk and refreshing. Fresh air, open windows, cold baths, plenty of exercise, a course at the "gym."—yes, even in the 'forties—no coddling, no "nerves," no "vapours," all this breeziness blows through the book, like a current of pure air. Above all, occupation; for the idle woman is the sick woman. About this, the great French playwright, Eugene Brieux, has something very inspiring to say. "Let those laugh now who used to talk of the women's 'weak organisation,'" he wrote quite recently. "It is a weakness that has stood the fatigue of the metal mill, and woman's 'frail' hands have polished helmets and stuffed bombshells and orificed cannon."

The women whose "frail" hands do the work above referred to, are not, of course, "daughters of the plough stronger than men," nor women who have stood up to many a washing day, but middle-class persons of exactly the same rank in life as, let us say, Mrs. Nickleby or Arabella Allen, whom nobody could imagine doing munition work. Just mentioning the names is enough to bring contrast strongly before us. A hundred years ago, "ladies" enjoyed "poor health," and during the mid-century the only healthy woman in England seems to have been Queen Victoria, who, to do her justice, made no fuss whatever about her bodily ills, and yet she had nine children. She was fond of saying that the only time she underwent a surgical operation was when she had a tooth out. In her excellent health she did not set an example to her women subjects, for all the celebrated women of that era "enjoyed poor health." Taking the names at random, as they come to mind, there are Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Mrs. Carlyle (her letters are absolute walls of self commiseration about her wretched health), Mrs. J. S. Mill (who retained the love of two men for the best part of a quarter of a century, and yet suffered all the time from a spinal complaint). These all were (to speak without malice) professional invalids. The fashion now is to be healthy; to be as unconscious of your body as you can. Prophets are all busy foretelling what women are going to be like when the war is over, and one and all agree in saying that nobody is going to have any time whatever for the woman who considers that middle age is a disease.

TO CLEAN FUR, FELT AND KID.

White [illegible] may be cleaned by powdered magnesia. The pretty and popular white felt hats will look fresh through a whole season, if treated to an occasional rub. For suede in neutral [illegible] like brown, grey, and tan, where [illegible] of boot tops, a very effective cleaning [illegible] rubb. It is often a good plan [illegible] gloves, boots, or hats or any of [illegible] material [illegible] the shop assistant [illegible] clean. He or she [illegible] recommend something that will "do the trick," and if the soap, or whatever it is, costs an extra sixpence, the result is worth the [illegible] of that large sum. Boot tops, by the way, present a problem of their own. Gabardine and cloth uppers should be [illegible] with a hard-bristled clothes brush to remove the dust. There is no need to recommend petrol as a glove-cleaner, for everybody knows it. But it is an extremely dangerous substance to handle, and should never be used at night, or near a fire in the day time. Benzine or petrol will rub out spots from cloth, and it is a splendid remover of grease.

To clean white furs, get a handful of bran, and moisten it with water; then lay the fur on the table, and rub it with the moistened bran, applied with a piece of flannel. Dry with a clean piece of muslin. This work wants doing quickly, and force should not be used. See that all the bran is cleared away from the fur. Ordinary furs are cleaned by stripping off the binding and the stuffing. Then take a stiff clothes brush, and with the fur laid flat on the table, brush firmly, but not roughly. Warm two handfuls of bran in a pan to drive off the moisture. Rub the warmed bran into the fur with the palm of the hand. Use plenty of bran; you can brush it all out afterwards, when the fur will be bright and clean.

Lady Anderson Stuart is in charge of the Army Medical [illegible] stall on War Chest Day, and Mrs. [illegible] will be in [illegible] stall, and [illegible] of all [illegible] and [illegible] Fruit [illegible] Friends are asked to bring [illegible] into the depot in [illegible] on Wednesday or Thursday.

Entries for the Australian Motor Comforts Fund [illegible] July [illegible] [illegible] Friends are asked to [illegible] every [illegible] sandwiches, fruit, flowers, jam, and sweets.

FASHION AS SHE IS.

COATS.

The "wrap coat" in any form whatsoever has a decided fascination for us on these cold days. I do not think there is a woman whose appearance is not enhanced when she is cosily clad in an appropriate coat. Quite a number of designs appear among the newest models, novelty, originality, and elegance predominate. The more luxurious materials, such as expensive furs, are preferable with most women, but when it is a matter of considering one's purse, other materials are chosen, and they appeal just as much to the woman of taste as the fur models do. The latter, however, are carried out in alluring pelts, such as kolinsky, musquash, seal, coney, skunk, and fox. A natural musquash cut to the decided fulness, and decorated with a collar and cuffs of skunk, while the edge was bordered with a broad band of the skunk, proved a most up-to-date design. A coat such as this is generally designed in a three-quarter length; the skirt is very full, and flares at the edge, the fur band keeping the flares in place; three large musquash-covered buttons form the fastenings in front. Coats may be fashioned in varying lengths, according to the taste of the wearer. The three-quarter length has always a greater note of distinction about it than a much longer coat has. Pony seal is another pelt used in the making of these winter coats. It has quite an extraordinary vogue, as it wears well, and looks up-to-date. A charming model in this pelt showed the flared effect, buttoning close to the throat, a broad band of the pelt confined the back of the coat, finished with a large self-covered button on either side. A trimming of fine black wolf fur showed at the fluted edge of the coat, the collar and cuffs boasting a wide band of the same fur. In some instances the cuffs of the coat are so deep that when the hands close together the effect is that of a fur muff. A novel coat shape carried out in a pelt was slightly shaped to the wearer's figure. The result was very chic indeed. The high, cosy collar and turned-back cuffs were of fur, the coat fastened slightly to the side with somewhat large buttons. The sides showed an inlet of panels, giving the necessary fashionable fulness. This coat was daintily lined with a dull peacock blue soft liberty silk.

The pelts used in the making of these modern warm coats are quite flexible and light in weight. In fact, they can be worn with ease over the smartest little taffeta silk frock without any fear of the latter being crushed out of shape. One of the very latest pelts is a soft pale fawn shade, with darker markings in many instances. The coat is so made as to show the lightest part of the fur in a striped effect. Persian lamb with a trimming of black fox fur is another likable combination. The coat may be buttoned to the neck, or worn low, forming revers. The wide belt is worn low. A caracul coat showed the new full flounce; the belt came from under the sleeves, and crossed in front, the side panels forming a V-shape splicing, giving an uncommon line. The collar and cuffs were of rich black fur. There are quite a number of details to be studied, but on the whole the effect is just a fully flared coat, fur-edged and fur-betrimmed collar and cuffs, with or without a belt.

But we recognise that all cannot be the possessors of a fur garment, so less costly and equally elegant in appearance is the coat of velours, cloth, serge, duvetyn, or satin. A jacket is noticed with most of these coats. An example boasted the Russian scheme, fashioned of a velours cloth in a distinct navy. The Russian influence showed in the narrow braided decorations in front. The collar was of the usual high design, and was in musquash. A tabbed belt of the cloth was trimmed with buttons of the same. The cuffs and flared edge of the coat were also trimmed with a broad band of musquash. With this able overcoat a coquettish-looking Russian "cap" of musquash was worn, also a large barrel-shaped muff of the same pelt. The effect was most foreign and becoming. Another fanciful coat was in a tete-de-negre cloth, showing a trimming of brown seal, buttoned in front with barrel-shaped deep brown buttons. Under the arms, half belt of the brown cloth held the coat in place, giving a certain swing. A smart little negro brown hat, rather close-fitting, was worn with this favoured coloured coat. This tete-de-negre certainly bears away the palm from other colours this season, and I was attracted to another negro brown wrap of duvetyn, fastened with large brown buttons, showing an outline of deep orange. The sleeves were set in rather low down, giving the effect of a Magyar shape; broad stitched bands trimmed the sides. A detachable high fur collar, as though it were a stole, and finished with the tail and legs of the fur, decorated the throat. In other cases the cloth coat may be trimmed right down the front and round the hem with fur, a broad band of the latter finishing the collar and cuffs.

A grey-toned model was fashioned in an uncommon manner; the shoulders and fronts were plain, and followed the figure. The skirt fell very full from the waist, and the coat fastened on the shoulder with two large buttons of grey and black, rimmed, stitched pockets showed at the sides, and musquash was used for the broad collar and cuffs. The whole scheme proved most attractive. A magpie effect was carried out in the shape of a black broad cloth, showing pleats on either side of the coat, a rather narrow belt confining the coat at the waist. A unique touch was given by a collar of white panne velvet; this collar (which could be thrown back) displayed deep pointed revers, one of the revers being longer than the other, and almost reaching to the waist. The effect was simple and tasteful. Velvet is yet another likable fabric. A perfectly French-looking confection was in a black velours. The upper part of the coat was deep yoked, and showed an outline of a narrow band of kolinsky fur round the high waistline; similar fur edged the fluted hem. The cossack-shaped collar fastened on the side, and was of fur, the cuffs also showing a broad band of the latter. The coat was fastened in front with two large fur-covered buttons. Quite an additional adornment may be given to the collar by a finish of fur tails at the side of the throat. It is not necessary for these coats to be trimmed with fur, although the latter adds a great deal to the attractiveness and cosiness of the coat. The plain style of stitching, braiding, and cording is just as popular; everything depends entirely upon the cut. A simple little scheme was in black corduroy velvet. The waist was trimmed with a cording; the same decoration was repeated at the hem of the coat; the sleeves were finished in the same manner; the coat appeared to be double-breasted, owing to the revers fastening across with a single button. The effect was simplicity itself, but at the same time, most modern. Another deep-yoked velvet coat was fastened with self-covered buttons. A loose high collar of soft black fur stood well up around the ears, fastening at the left side with two buttons; the fur-trimmed cuffs matching the collar, fur also edged the opening front of the coat, coming well from the yoke to the hem. Soft black Roman satin, lined with satin of the same, and fur betrimmed prove a delightful accessory for afternoon wear.

To accompany these winter coats, new capes, collars, muffs, mufflers, pelerines, necklets, etc., are noticed in a great variety. Most of these adjuncts are designed in furs and velvets. The newest shape in muffs is the "Zeppelin," a large barrel-shaped muff, resembling the machine after which it is called. Another is the leg-o'-mutton shape, also very large. It is small at one end and covering arm well above the elbow, and is finished with a cuff of its own fur. Melon and ball shaped cuffs are also having their day of triumph. The long muff, nevertheless, still plays quite a conspicuous part among the present-day accessories. In some instances the barrel-shaped muff shows the fur running in long horizontal lines. The pelerine is one of the newest in fashions. A fur pelerine adds to the costume of to-day. A fascinating example was in a rich brown skunk. It could be worn close to the throat, or follow the lines of the shoulders. Brown satin ribbon held it in place.

Generally the pelerine is carried out on similar lines to that of the muff. An example of a fur pelerine hung in points in front, and was finished with a high, upstanding collar, the collar closing well round the throat. The muff matched this neck-and-shoulder ornament. And this scheme was in musquash, lined with tailless ermine. It formed a most delightful setting to the wearer's face. Black fox is one of the many favoured furs for such purposes; a frilling of black satin may be seen at the edge. Skunk is another conspicuous fur this season, especially for these accessories. Some of these latter dress extras, such as muffs and collarettes, may be noticed fashioned of ribbon, and trimmed with mole skin and frills of black lace. The muff is finished with a tiny bunch of coloured flowers. Strips of fur may be introduced with these beribboned muffs. Taffeta and fur is another successful combination in these muffs. A quaint-looking paletot was in musquash; the folds of the pelt followed the lines of the shoulders, ribbons held the wrap in place; these encircled the waist, and tied at the back or in front, according to taste. A muff to match showed the barrel shape, and revers ends. The crossed-over pelerine muff formed a most charming finish to the coat.

MAISIE.

"HAM FRILLS."

Like Mr. H. G. Wells, whose portrait of an occasional type of to-day, taken from a most illuminating article, contributed to the "Ladies' Home Journal," for June, on "The Woman and the War," is given below, Mr. Justice Harvey is of opinion that the present fashions have floated away to absurdity. The learned Judge gave a most amusing and at the same time keenly critical address on Thursday afternoon at the speech day of Ascham School, and while commending school girls of the advanced class on their general exemption from folly in dress, he begged them to keep up the same attitude in after life. "At the present time," he said, "I see many women wearing ham frills around their necks. I strongly advise you not to wear them. A ham frill is only becoming to a person with a face like a ham." The social column also drew down upon it some "strictures from the Bench." "Do not be among those who strive to see their names in the social columns of the newspapers," exhorted Justice Harvey; "some people think that any effort or deed is valueless unless it is reported;" and he drew from the war some instances of heroism performed by men whose names will never be known, who will live in history as unknown heroes, by reason of their very anonymity, doing the splendid deed without any thought of fame or plaudit.

"IS SHE HERE, TOO?"

"Every now and then through the austere bustle of London in war time," says Mr. H. G. Wells, "drifts a last practitioner of the 'eternal feminine'—with the air of a foreign visitor, with the air of devotion to some peculiar cult. She has very high-heeled boots; she has a skimpy skirt with a peculiar hang, due no doubt to mysteries about the waist; she wears a comic little hat over one brow, there is something of Columbine about her, something of the Watteau shepherdess, something of a vivandiere, something of every age but the present age.

"Her face, subject to the strange dictates of the mode, is smooth like the back of a spoon with small features and little whisker-like curls before the ears, such as butcher boys used to wear heail a century ago. Even so, she dare not do this thing alone. Something in khaki is with her to justify her. You are to understand that this strange rig is for seeing him off or giving him a good time during his leave. Sometimes she is quite elderly, sometimes nothing khaki is to be got, and the pretence that this is desired of her wears thin. Still the type will out.

"She does not pass with impunity; the last exponent of true feminine charm. The vulgar, the street boys, have evolved one of those strange sayings that have the air of being fragments from some lost and forgotten chant:

She's the army contractor's only daughter
Spending it now.

"Or simply: 'Spending it now.'"

"She does not pass with impunity, but she passes. She makes her stilted passage across the arena upon which the new womanhood of Western Europe shows its worth. It is an exit."

AUSTRALIANS IN IRELAND.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, May 17.

With Mrs. R. E. O'Connor and Miss O'Connor, of Sydney, who have just returned from Ireland, I have been having a chat. They were in that country during the recent "distressfulness," but, luckily, they had left Dublin and had gone to Cork, where young O'Connor was in barracks with his regiment. He went to France yesterday. Cork, Mrs. O'Connor said, was, on the whole, peaceful. There were some slight disturbances, which it was feared might develop, and so all soldiers were confined to barracks, an hour's leave only being granted to officers. She passed through Dublin, and saw some of the disturbance, which was terrible; the looting was prodigious, but the Sinn Feiners were not blamed for that; the "Shawlies" (the women from the slums who wear shawls) and their children were the culprits. Of course, the Germans were to blame for the whole mad enterprise. There were evidences of the way the Germans spent money like water all over the place. Mrs. O'Connor has three sons, all fighting; one in Egypt and two in France. She said that all the loyal Irish are very proud of the way the imprisoned Irish troops behaved in Germany, tempted, as they were, by Casement and the military, and so severely punished when they would not yield.

THE "PUDDING LADY."

Miss Petty, known as the "Pudding Lady," whose mission it is to teach economical cookery to the women of the St. Pancras' School for Mothers, was recently interviewed about her craft of pastry and pudding making. Miss Petty, it is interesting to know, never uses a paste board or a rolling pin. In her method she tries to eliminate all unnecessary items. A clean piece of brown paper, often the inside of a slit-up paper bag (which it is to be hoped did not contain potatoes or anything equally dusty!) serves her to roll out her paste, and a glass bottle is better than a wooden pin as a roller. The recipes given to her interviewer were too much after the style of food for pretty cocky to be altogether acceptable as entremets. No matter how you disguise bread in a pudding it always betrays itself by its soppiness. Somebody lately wrote a "Hymn of Hate" to bread pudding, which began—

"Pie or pudding, we hate them not,
Plum or apple or apricot."

And went on to say—

"We have one hate and only one—bread pudding!"

A first aid class will shortly be commenced in connection with the Paddington-Woollahra ladies' nursing division of the St. John Ambulance. Intending students should apply to the superintendent, Mrs. M. Johnston, Tora, 178 Edgecliff-road, Woollahra, or to the secretary, Mrs. L. Maston, 46 Victoria-street, Paddington.

The First Light Horse stall on War Chest Day will be at the corner of Martin-place and Pitt-street. Many dainty novelties will be on sale, including a large number of fine linen handkerchiefs with hand-embroidered colour patches of the various units of the A.I.F. Amongst the goods to be raffled are two Siamese brass trays, an Eastern embroidered tablecloth, and a pale blue golf coat.

HOME AFFAIRS.

CANTEENS AND KITCHENS.

The Red Cross Kitchen, in Ash-street, is one of the most promising of our war-time institutions. It is not only a "promising" but a "performing" enterprise; but it is on its value as a sign-post or guide as to what may come to pass in days to be that I should chiefly like to dwell just now. In her Melbourne Notes this week "Veronica" tells of the establishment there of a kitchen very like our own. Public interest runs very keenly on the trail of this topic just now. It seems as if these canteens and Red Cross kitchens are teaching us something that we have had at the back of our minds for years, and yet, struggle as we might, the thought could not get itself shaped into a practical idea. A war-time canteen—a co-operative kitchen—surely here is a solution ready to our hand of much of what vexes and troubles us in daily life. Into these kitchens are brought vast quantities of food, which is cooked in an expeditious and comprehensive way, and rapidly distributed. The time occupied in getting up a dinner for, say, 50 diners is exactly the same as that consumed in getting up a dinner for 10. In a large canteen a steam roaster, with one cook in attendance, will cook as many joints as would serve for the dinners in all the houses in a suburban street. A steam washing-up machine will deal with all the dishes afterwards in just about the same time as one jaded "general" takes to wash up the couple of dozen plates and cups required by the average suburban family, and the steam does not break any of the china.

With thoughts like this simmering in my brain, I, like many other housewives, took a basket in hand and sallied forth on Saturday morning to buy enough meat for three days, Monday being one of those highly unnecessary holidays of which we are all heartily tired. They say there was a great crowd at the Income tax Office on the last day of paying in. But it was nothing to the crowds in all the butchers' shops on Saturday morning. I believe it is the same every week. Women call or send for their requirements now, to save booking and delivery—charges which pile Pelion upon Ossa in the weekly bill. So there we all were. The busy salesmen were chopping up meat into scores of more or less tiny and wasteful little joints and cuts, destined to be cooked each in its separate kitchen, with an extravagant expenditure of fuel. Each piece of meat meant the anxious watchfulness of one woman, and probably two women, for if the maid were the cook the mistress would have the "dinner on her mind" just the same. What a waste of money, labour, time, and energy it all showed.

If we had some workable system of a distributing kitchen, with quick motor delivery, it would mean a more scientific and efficient—everybody strives to be "efficient" these days—treatment of our daily cares. It ought to work out to a more economical money result, too; but whenever this question has been brought forward—and it is by no means a new one—the cost of the meals puts the co-operative kitchen outside the range of practical domestic politics. But that cookery is gradually being withdrawn from the amateur to the professional sphere, we have only to look round to see. Bread, butter, sauces, jams, pickles, sausages, and cheese are all factory made. Many kinds of meat also are sold ready cooked. Tinned goods are not in the question, for they do not fill the same demand. If the principle could be extended a little to include soups, puddings, and many entrees, it might advance the millennium of comfort still more. For instance, clear soup, consommee, can best be made in large quantities. There is no reason why soup could not be delivered from a central kitchen to various households which required just so much and no more.

The men munition workers in England are said to be so charmed with their canteen dinners, carefully and even daintily served, that they will never be content to go back to the slipshod discomfort of the average working-class home, where the housewife has hardly any utensils and hardly any knowledge of cookery.

Miss Sellers, in an article in the "Nineteenth Century" last year, called attention to the experiments in cheap catering that had already been made, and she gave an account of a steam kitchen in Christiania, which has been working 57 years—"its working expenses are only 8.7 of its turnover, and its annual turnover seven years ago was £70,000. The meal it cooks can be eaten on the premises or taken home. All classes patronise it, and the cheapest dinner, with a choice of several dishes costs a little over 1d a head. If taken home it costs a little less." In a kitchen of this sort economy ought surely to be found a workable proposition. Of course, we all recognise that labour is the pressing problem. In the canteens and Red Cross kitchens the labour is free. But, still, it is a good portent that many women are thinking deeply over the wasteful and inefficient way in which our cookery is conducted. The time may be coming very soon when a home-made dinner will be considered as lacking in distinction as a home-made dress.

MARTHA.

COATS OF VELVET AND FUR FOR WINTRY WEATHER.

PENELOPE'S WEEKLY NOTES.

THE HOME ECONOMIST.

If one were to ask a housewife in France what she found her greatest aid to economy, her answer would invariably be the "stockpot," or, in her own parlance, the "pot-au-feu." Her stockpot contains such things as we thoughtlessly throw away—the outside leaves of cabbages and cauliflowers and many vegetable trimmings (which frequently are more valuable even than the vegetables themselves that come to table in a tureen), pieces of waste bread, heads and trimmings of fish.

In a homely (and English) article on Kitchen Thrift, "Penelope" read the other day:—"If you take my advice you'll make it a rule to have a stockpot always on the fire. There's nothing like a basin of good thick soup (none of your watery concerns, mind) for warming up a man and making him pleasant, and it's satisfying, besides. Don't get the idea that a stockpot's a rubbish heap, where you can pop every blessed thing you don't want. Nothing must go in that isn't fresh and clean and good, and every few days in winter empty it and start afresh." In our climate a summer stockpot is impossible, unless our ice chest is requisitioned.

How many of us who have hearkened to such lore feel that we cannot claim to have our feet set on the narrow path of economy unless we have established at our own fireside the stockpot of renown—and there are obstacles against our so establishing it.

To begin with, the fire itself. Even in winter time it is the exception rather than the rule to find a fire in the Australian kitchen all day long. We are economising in fuel or gas, and therefore cannot accommodate a perpetual stockpot on our stove.

Breakfast over, in numerous homes the gas is turned off or the fire let out till it is time to cook the night's dinner, the kettle for the luncheon cup of tea or coffee being boiled on a gas-ring or Primus stove. And at night the stove is full, in all probability—full as it can hold, with pots and pans for dinner—far too full to give space to the capacious stockpot our economical instinct urges us to possess. Besides, our dinner can be cooked in two or three hours, and the stockpot should be simmering there all day.

The modified "pot au feu" is known in many Australian homes. "Here to-day, and gone the day after to-morrow" is the motto for our stockpot. The French housewife has a motto that you can put everything into the stockpot except bread and potatoes. Stale bread crusts are used to delicious purpose by a French cook, to garnish "crouto au pot," a cabbage soup, thin and brown; but the crusts are put into the tureen, and require no cooking. Sopped bread in soup would disgust an expert. Fish, too, is best left out of the ordinary stockpot, unless we wish to make "bouillebaisse," a little known dish (except to those who remember Thackeray) here, and not much to the taste of the average Australian family, the reason being that you cannot get the right kinds of fish here, even with the trawlers. Bouillebaisse requires the tunny of the Mediterranean, a large sea-dweller, with dark flesh of a meaty appearance. Fish such as bream, whiting, and flat-head, mixed with other ingredients in soup, would result in something resembling the "hell-broth" brewed by the weird sisters. The three witches had a capital stock pot; to get the recipe for its contents, read Macbeth, act IV. sc. 1.

Modern stock-pots are made with a tap and the liquor is drawn off as required. This is used, of course, only where large quantities of soup or gravy are needed. For ordinary family use a big saucepan answers the purpose just as much. Now the weather is cold, the stock, with vegetables and other ingredients, is all the better for standing overnight, because the fat can then be taken off. Any kind of fat spoils soup, except turtle soup. Sydney once possessed a French chef who was a master of the pot au feu. His soups remain as pleasant memories through a vista of years. He was at a leading hotel, and afterwards at Kosciusko. But his strong suit was certainly not economy.

Potatoes, of course, make soup, but not when they are thrown indiscriminately into the cauldron with a heterogeneous mixture.

There are many ways of saving, but the soup tureen and its twin brother, the stockpot, excel them all in wisdom and virtue. With a soup tureen full of hot appetising well-made soup, thick for preference, and garnished at that, you can face your hungry family serenely, secure in the consciousness of being able to satisfy the most hungry.

The Necessary Commodities Commission has advanced the price of cheese—a very necessary commodity in many households in winter—by 1d a pound. It has also graded butter, that the householder may choose his or her own quality. The best, to be known as "choicest quality," is to-day 1s 5½d a pound; and second quality is 1s 3½d. To quote a recent newspaper paragraph, on the subject "butter":—A butter cart may charge 3½d over the proclaimed wholesale price, when the butter is stamped "choicest," but only 2½d if it is in a plain wrapper. Eggs are fairly plentiful, and 2s 6d a dozen.

FROM NEAR AND FAR.

Button Day forms the great topic of interest, and but little else is talked of this week. For Friday all plans are now complete, and all we are asked to do now is to "buy a button." The War Chest is run on very simple lines. Most of us read the advertised statement that the balance in hand now is only £801—not much left out of £59,000, all of which has gone to its destined use for our men on active service—our fighting men, every one of whom is so valuable an asset. Mr. Budden and Mr. Henley are men in whom the public have the fullest confidence, and when they ask for money it means that money is wanted. There is no need, therefore, to press the claims of Button Day, and these few words are just by way of a reminder to all women readers of the page that War Chest Day falls on June 30, two days after June 28, which is the most fateful date, humanly speaking, in history, for it was two years ago to-day that the Sarajevo assassinations occurred.

Miss Alice Masaryk, a well-known worker in university settlement activities, who was associated in Chicago with Miss Jane Addams and Miss M'Dowell, "the angel of the stockyards," is in prison in Vienna on a charge of high treason. She is of mixed Bohemian and American descent; her father, a professor at Prague University, made a protest as a member of the Austrian Parliament against the invasion of Servia, and he was exiled. All the staff of the paper representing his political views were imprisoned for treason, and among them was his daughter. Although she was condemned to death, it is hoped that she will be released, as the women of Boston and Chicago were, at latest information, getting up a petition for clemency, to be forwarded through the Ambassador.

The Empire Nurses Red Cross Club at Cairo, which has now attained a membership of nearly 500 nurses, has only been in existence a few months. The club is extremely proud of a gift from the Queen, which was sent out to Egypt. The members of the Western Suburbs St. John Ambulance Association have every confidence in a full house resulting from their efforts to sell tickets for the Summer Hill Victoria Picture Theatre to-night in aid of "Edith Cavell House." It should be noted that "Edith Cavell House" is the official recognised title. The word "Home" has been so cheapened that it has grown out of favour for public institutions.

An "at home" was given at the Queen Victoria Club yesterday afternoon, when Mrs. John Waugh, president, welcomed as the guest of honour Mrs. C. G. Wade, president of the Women's Liberal League. Three officers each from 15 suburban branches were among those present, and the room was crowded with ladies. Mrs. Wade thanked Mrs. Waugh for the compliment paid her, and Mrs. Joseph Cook also spoke. Miss Cree contributed songs, and Miss Eileen Waugh played a violin solo. The guests were entertained at afternoon tea.

"When earth's last picture is painted, and the tubes are twisted and dried," sang Kipling, and even he would have been puzzled to find a use for the paint tubes after the last blob of colour had been screwed out of them. To find a use for old tubes, however, has been the discovery of some clever Sydney women. One day, very soon, the public will be surprised to see what that use has become, in the hands of some of our wounded soldiers.

A PIONEER WOMAN FARMER.

On reading the article "Women as Farmers" ("A Page for Women," May 17), I recall an acquaintance of many years back, who had practical experience of such work. She was rather a small, delicately-made woman, of gentle, refined manner, from New Zealand. Suffering constantly from ill-health in her girlhood, she came under the influence of a man who was at that period considered highly erratic, but whose ideas are in many instances justified in the present day. He advised her to go on to a farm, dressed in modified boy's attire, and breathe the fresh air, bathe in the sunshine, and draw in nourishment from the emanations of mother earth.

In desperation, and with a large amount of faith, she obeyed his instructions: telling me in a later year how she then "followed the plough," and did practically the whole of a boy's work—with the result of much improved health and development.

There being no reason to regard this conclusion as unique, I feel sure that many would benefit by the same conditions.

JAY.

SEASONABLE RECIPES.

Stewed Celery: Add a well-washed and trimmed head of celery to 1 pint each of boiling milk and water. The celery should be white, and the sticks of equal length. Served with spaghetti and grated cheese, this makes a nice change. The spaghetti should be boiled, and then a white sauce made of some of the celery liquor, flour, butter, pepper, and salt, in the ordinary way, should be poured on the spaghetti and celery in a pie dish. Grate cheese on top, and brown in the oven.

Pig's Cheek: This is a very much liked dish for Sunday cold supper. Boil it well, and leave to cool in water. The butcher charges 1s 3d for an uncooked cheek, and it is always preferable to buy it that way. Cut slices from cheek and tongue evenly mixed, and garnish with parsley. The cheek with what is left on it should be boiled again (not in the same water) with a knuckle of veal, and very tasty brawn can be made. Boil until the flesh leaves the knuckle. Mix well together and place in moulds, leaving them overnight. The cheek should not be sent to table as it is a most unsightly joint.

MELBOURNE NOTES.

Lady Helen Ferguson declared open, on the 22nd inst., the first Red Cross kitchen established in Victoria. The kitchen, which has been fitted up in the basement of the Hawthorn Town Hall, has been established with the object of supplying soups, jams, and special foods, and all kinds of culinary comforts for the use of wounded and sick soldiers in the base and other military hospitals in Victoria. The originator of the idea was the Mayoress of Hawthorn (Mrs. Percy J. Russell), and the kitchen has been, with the aid of the local Red Cross workers, equipped in a thoroughly up-to-date fashion. In welcoming her Excellency, the Mayor (Councillor Russell) stated that the kitchen would be worked by relays of ladies each day. Mr. Davies, connected with the Sydney Red Cross Society, spoke of the working of the Red Cross kitchen in Sydney.

VERONICA.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

"A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." So said Shakespeare, and we all admit the fact. But the importance of a fact may be exaggerated, and a quotation may be misapplied. The scent of a rose is not its only quality. The name rose is the centre of a great circle of association, the heart whence spring thoughts of colour, ideas of beauty, visions of delicacy, longings for sweetness and purity. A rose by any other name certainly would smell as sweet; but no one would suggest that we should alter the name.

So with other names which some desire to alter, and not only desire to do, but succeed in doing, without any consideration but that which is prompted by prejudice. Just now, because we are at war with Germany and justly detest German arrogance and German brutality, some people would urge us to alter every name of German origin, as though we were at war with her past and desired to fight her language and her science. We may sympathise with the man who wishes to change Berlin-street to Kangaroo-avenue. He has to face the jeers of the unthinking, and the inconvenience caused by the change must be merely local and limited. But there are many words of foreign origin which have become not only British, but cosmopolitan, universal—names which we have long ceased to connect with the country of their birth.

The young man who packs his "portmanteau," buys a "bouquet" for his "fiancee," and starts from a "depot" of some sort, to take her to a "soiree," where everybody will ask for an "encore," does not know that he is thinking and speaking French. When he buys a "gazette" he is as ignorant of Venetian as he is of Arabic when he visits a "chemist." Who thinks of Italy when he goes to a "conversazione," or of Germany when he enjoys the singing at the "liedertafel," or watches the play of children in a "kindergarten." Who dreams of Iceland when he shouts "Hurrah."

We Britons have been busy for centuries enriching our language, and increasing our ability to express our thoughts, by taking and in time assimilating the ideas and words of every people with whom we have come in contact. We have been as willing to take "taboo" from a savage island as we were to take "circus" from Rome, and "theatre" from Athens, and if we are to cast out of our common tongue the words of every alien or enemy we may in the course of years be poor indeed.

Just now "kindergarten" has fallen under the ban of more than one authoritative speaker, and we have heard a proposal that the places where our little ones grow into beauty of mind and body, and develop like flowers in a tended garden, shall be called by another name. One pauses astonished to ask "Why?" And "By what name?" No other single word could so well express the thing it stands for, unless indeed we take the hint of the children in Chippendale who call it the "Kiddies' Garden." No other name could so tenderly describe the hopeful care, the loving watchfulness that is the essence of the teaching. Why should we alter it? Must we forget Froebel and his delight when he said "I have found it," because he was a German? Shades of Luther and Beethoven, of Goethe and Helmholtz forbid.

We are not at war with language. Kindergarten as a theory and method of education belongs to every civilised nation in the world, to every people which looks beyond the present to the future of the race. We could not alter it if we would, we would not if we could. But we may hope that some day, some how, the sweet wholesome spirit that Froebel loved, may live again in Germany, and that her children may again learn to be true to the freedom of the kindergarten.

MILLINERY.

DAVID JONES' HALF-GUINEA AND GUINEA MILLINERY REPRESENTS THE NEWEST STYLES IN DEPENDABLE MATERIALS.

A BLACK VELVET SAILOR AT 10/6.

We feel that, however eloquently millinery is described in an advertisement, unless there are illustrations it is difficult to realise the exact style and full value; the advertising in this column is restricted to type matter only, therefore we lay special stress on the invitation to our Millinery Showroom (2nd floor) to inspect the wide variety at half a guinea and a guinea; also to compare the David Jones values. This black velvet sailor at 10/6 is a typical example. It is available in either small or medium shape, with softly fitting crown, trimmed with corded ribbon, in white, black, saxe, or rose.

BLACK VELVET PICTURE HAT—HALF A GUINEA.

This is another prominent style in the special display being made in our Millinery showroom (on second floor) all this week. It is of medium size, with corded brim slightly rolled at back and folded crown, trimmed with woollen flowers in various colours. 10/6.

AT ONE GUINEA.

SMALL BLACK VELVET, ALSO A MATRON'S HAT.

These are types of the very wide range at 21/, and the large number of ladies who regularly purchase our Guinea Millinery bespeak the sound value they represent. The small black velvet has a plaited band of corded ribbon round crown, and a band of gathered corded ribbon round edge of brim, which is slightly upturned at back and finished with flat bead posies. The other guinea style is designed specially for the matron and evolved from black corded silk and trimmed with swathe and high loops of black ribbon velvet. It is lined with black velvet and has a high crown and narrow rolled brim.

HAVE YOU EVER TRIED "J.S.W." TOILET PREPARATIONS?

HAIR FOOD AND FACE CREAM, EACH 3/.

The name of John Strange Winter has long stood as a synonym for whatever is best and most up-to-date in toilet preparations. Their remarkable value has been quickly recognised by those who have used them, and they become favourites whenever they are tried. The hair food is a penetrative lotion which effectually cleanses and also stimulates the growth. It is not a dye, and does not affect the colour, but gives it a soft, silky appearance. There are two distinct varieties, both in bottles of about 4oz—Oily 3/, and Non-oily 4/. The New Face Cream contains not a trace of grease. It is a rich skin feeding cream, sure safeguard against winter winds and sudden changes of weather, and when applied to an irritated skin instantly banishes that smarting and burning sensation. The combined names of David Jones and John Strange Winter stand as the guarantee of purity. Obtainable in 2oz jars, 3/ each, Perfumery Dept. (downstairs).

Amongst the many items of interest in our Advertisement on the back page is one showing how you can save 9d on winter bloomers by purchasing to-day.

A MAN'S WORK.

BY SILAS K. HOCKING.

[ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.]

CHAPTER X.—Continued.

He could understand being kept from her bedside during the worst of her illness—there might be reason in Hunter's fear of another shock—but when she was able to get up and recline on a couch there was no reason in the world why he should not have been allowed to see her. He had felt inclined sometimes to take the law into his own hands and go to her room in spite of all domestic and medical prohibitions. As he looked at the matter he was as nearly being her husband as a man could be who was not actually married. Measured by time, he was within half an hour of being a married man, and it seemed absurd that he was not allowed to see Adela whenever he wanted to.

He had swallowed a good deal of pride during the last fortnight, but he meant to be even with the whole lot of them later on. When he got Adela away from Stonehurst he would be in a position to dictate terms; and he was more determined than ever that Adela should see very little of her people. As for Dr. Hunter and Miss Willoughby, they should never come near her again if he could prevent it. He was not the sort of man to take things lying down, and they would very soon be made to see it.

He felt very confident as he walked toward the house, and carried himself with a more jaunty air than usual. His hat was set rakishly on the side of his head. A fancy waistcoat set off his neat—if somewhat diminutive—figure. His hands were encased in bright-yellow suede gloves, while underneath his right arm he carried a gold-knobbed walking-stick. He had no doubt whatever that Adela would feel immensely proud of him.

That she might have changed in any way during her illness was a thought that had not occured to him, nor did it occur to him now. The time had gone by for any reconsideration of the matter. She was as nearly his wife as she could be without being actually married. All that was required was a mere legal formality—a few words before a parson—and the thing was done.

To all intents and purposes he was in possession, and had been for weeks past. He was amazed that the Bardells had failed to see this. Jane, of course, was an old maid, and perhaps some excuse should be made for her, but the others—well, he had no patience with them.

On arrival, he was shown at once into the drawing-room, and his annoyance flashed into his eyes again when he discovered that she was not alone. Miss Willoughby and Jane were with her.

For the first few moments he purposely took no notice of them—he would have ignored them entirely if he could have done so without appearing rude. It seemed to him frightfully bad taste on their part to be present at all. They ought to have understood that at their first meeting he and Adela would want to be alone.

Adela rose to greet him with a grave look in her eyes, but with a delightful colour staining her cheeks.

"By Jove, she is lovelier than ever," was the first thought that flashed through his brain.

Thinner, no doubt, but more fragile looking, but these things only enhanced her beauty. For a moment he stood regarding her with admiring eyes. He felt proud of being in practical possession of so lovely a creature. He wanted to take her in his arms and crush her to his heart. She was daintier than a piece of delicately-coloured porcelain; sweeter than honeysuckle; more alluring than anything he had ever seen in his life before.

He never felt so inordinately proud, so immensely consequential. He had great difficulty in keeping himself under complete control. He hated the other women for being in the room at that moment.

Adela advanced a step or two and held out her hand. She was very calm and self-possessed, and he was quick to see that she wanted no demonstration before the others. That, no doubt, was right enough from her point of view, but from his it was simply maddening. He took her hand and pressed it warmly, then raised it to his lips.

"By Jove, Adela," he murmured huskily, "I am glad to see you again—what?"

"You look well, Jasper," she said quietly.

"It's the pleasure of seeing you, my dear; but, great Scot, you have kept me a long time waiting—you have indeed," and he looked fiercely at Jane and Winifred.

"I have recovered as rapidly as possible," she smiled; "but are you not going to speak to the others?"

"Of course, I am," he grunted sourly. "How do, Jane? How do, Miss Willoughby?" and, without waiting for a reply, he turned again and looked at Adela.

"You are a picture, and no mistake, Adela. What?" he exclaimed delightedly.

"You should not pay compliments, Jasper," she said with a quiet smile. "But you will be ready for your tea, I am quite sure."

"Not I," he exclaimed boldly. "I don't want any tea, I want you!"

She frowned at him; then said quietly: "But we want our tea, Jasper. We have waited till you came. Won't you ring, Jane?"

Jane went and pressed the bell, and Fenlove dropped into a chair muttering, something under his breath that sounded slightly profane.

He felt distinctly annoyed. Why, in the name of commonsense, did Adela bother about tea at such a moment? What were women made of? Tea could wait. It would not trouble him if he had nothing to eat or drink for the rest of the day. He wanted to be alone with the woman who was almost his wife—wanted to have the day fixed for their wedding.

Tea proved to be a rather silent meal. None of them appeared to be quite at their ease. Jane and Winifred manifested distinct signs of impatience. They neither of them quite understood why. Adela wished them to be present during the first part of her interview with Sir Jasper. However, tea would soon be over, and then they would leave them together.

Adela was the most composed of the quartette. Nevertheless, Winifred watched her with considerable anxiety. She was afraid that her composure was more apparent than real. Fenlove was distinctly sulky. Jane looked apprehensive.

Tea was over at length, and the table cleared. Then Adela turned to her sister and Winifred with a smile, and said quite calmly: "Now, girls, you can leave us. Jasper and I want to be alone for a while."

"No doubt you do," Jane said sourly, and walked out of the room, followed closely by Winifred.

CHAPTER XI.
HOME TRUTHS.

As soon as the door closed, Fenlove jumped out of his chair, caught Adela round the waist, and tried to kiss her. She slipped out of his arms, however, like an eel, and ran to the bell.

"If you attempt that again, Jasper," she said quietly, "I shall ring."

He stared at her in utter surprise. He had kissed her before and she had not raised the smallest objection. Surely a man had a right to kiss his fiancee. He wondered what had come to her.

"I—I—do not understand," he stammered. "You object—what?"

"Will you sit down?" she said steadily. "I want to talk to you." All the colour had gone from her face, but there was a determined look in her eyes.

"I'm—I'm—bound to say this is a strange reception," he replied, angrily.

"If you will sit down I will explain," she went on, in the same even tones. "I have come downstairs to-day on purpose to explain."

"Explain?" he snapped, staring hard at her. "There is nothing to explain. You are my wife within an ace. Another half-hour and the thing would have been done—what?"

"There is a good deal to explain, Jasper," she said, flushing a little. "Will you sit down and listen to me?"

He growled something under his breath and dropped into a chair. She sat down opposite him and folded her hands. For several seconds there was silence. Then she said quietly:—

"It's been all a mistake, Jasper. You know as well as I do that I was not myself. I had no feeling. I did not care. You wanted to marry me, and father and Jane were very anxious that you should do so. I had no will in the matter. I yielded because I had no energy to resist. I just drifted on the current, not caring what happened. I never promised anything. You and the others arranged everything and I remained passive and silent——"

"Well?" he snapped.

"Then something happened," she went on. "Something snapped in my brain, and when I recovered consciousness, life was different—I was different. I was like one who had awaked from a dream. Now I am myself again and I know that I can never marry you."

"Never marry me? Never marry me!" he shouted excitedly. "But you've got to marry me. Do you think—— Great Scot!"

"Don't get excited, Jasper," she said quietly. "You ought not to be surprised. You know I never promised. You took everything for granted."

"You as good as promised," he interjected. "You allowed me to buy the ring—the day was fixed, the guests invited"——

"Yes, I know. I am very sorry. You see, it was all a mistake——"

"But it wasn't a mistake," he retorted. "You know I have wanted you for years—I want you more than ever to-day—what?"

POULTRY.

Questions relating to fancy or commercial poultry keeping, etc., should be addressed to "Ancona," "Herald" Office.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mavis.—To get the best results from your fowls they should have meat in some form. In the absence of livers, heads, or like offal, meat meal is a good substitute.

Randwick.—The people who advertise incubator lots of eggs can be depended on to give honest value. These poultry-farm people are well known and reputable, and usually replace infertile eggs. The eggs are not from large flocks, as you suggest, but from breeding pens. Black Orpingtons or Langshans will be the most profitable for you. There are excellent laying strains of these breeds, and the cockerels, if kept till four or five months of age will pay well. Your house scraps, including bread, are the very best morning food you can supply; give grain in the evening.

Walgett.—From your various questions it is evident that you know nothing of poultry farming, and the following replies are based on that:—(1) A man with but £150 and neither house nor land would spend all the money before any return could be expected. Poultry houses and runs would have to be erected, stock purchased, incubators and other appurtenances secured. (2) A weekly profit from 300 hens could not be given. Some weeks there would be no profit, and much would depend on the age of the fowls and the management. (3) The feeding of poultry at the present time costs about 2d each per week, or 50s for 300 head. (4) The profit might be from 3s to as much as 7s each for the year. Before you spend any money you should visit some of the small poultry farms in the Sydney suburbs.

Houses.—(1) There are quite a number of poultry farmers who utilise thick hessian tacked on wood frames for poultry houses. If done neatly and white-washed both sides they look well, and are practical in every way. (2) Despite the increased price for galvanised iron, it is doubtful whether you can procure cheaper roofing. (3) The reason why more fowls can be kept on bare ground than on grassed, is that it can be kept fresh. You, however, should allow the fowls to eat the grass rather than remove it. From 30 to 40 fowls can be healthily kept in each run. (4) The incubator you inquire about is a cheap one, but has occasionally given good results. The price quoted is one of only 50 egg capacity.

The hon. secretary of the Illawarra Poultry Club forwards the schedule of the thirteenth annual show. There are 123 classes for the various breeds of fowls and ducks, with good prize money, and quite a lot of specials. Entries should be forwarded to-day to the hon. secretary, Mr. G. C. Warner, Croydon-road, Hurstville.

A number of fowls have been given by various breeders to the French's Forest returned soldiers, and the Department of Agriculture is providing six incubators. The machines have been more or less operated, but are being put into hatching condition by the respective manufacturers.

While the present month's prices for eggs have been no higher than those for June for several years past, poultry, on the other hand, is quoted at excessive rates. At one or two salerooms last week old hens realised 7s, 7s 9d, and to 8s 6d per couple; and cockerels of good quality fetched from 9s to 12s per couple. Those who took the advice to hatch in January last are now reaping their reward.

The first show of the Auburn and District Poultry, Pigeon, and Canary Club was held in the Auburn Town Hall last week. There was a total of nearly 800 entries, 550 of these being in poultry. Orpingtons were a good lot, the firsts in blacks going to Hawkes, Galvin, Bonaventure, and R. J. Inch. Minogue secured two of the first in buffs, Westwood and Breckenridge a first each. J. Hurst and H. Thomas had a first each in whites. Wyandottes were of good quality. Bonaventure, Pincott, Frew, Fryer, Rutherford, Edwards, Gaskin, and Cross all secured first in the respective colours of the breed. Leghorns were fair classes, the chief prizes going to A. M'Kennedy, Moore, Arnold, Bonaventure, M'Ilvenie, Lyons, and Barnes. Guildford Farm and Bonaventure shared the Hamburg prizes, and Bonaventure, Beale, and Hicks won in Plymouth Rocks. Langshans, Game, Spanish, Buttercups, Minorcas, and Andalusians were not largely shown.

Beginners frequently ask what quantity of meal and grain should be given a certain number of fowls each day. Some wish to know the weight, others the measure. It is impossible to name the exact quantity of food that fowls will consume day by day. No one flock will consume the same quantity each day, for the fowls' appetites vary. The bird may be resting or moulting, and, if laying, will eat almost double what she does at other times. Again, fowls on unlimited range will not require half the quantity necessary for those penned up, as they are continually on the hunt for insects, seeds, grass, and other natural foods. Speaking generally, at the present time 1½d to 2d per week will purchase all the food a penned-up fowl will require. This cost will be reduced by half if the fowl is running at large.

Queensland Kennel Club	July 8
Victorian P. and K. Club	August 3, 4, 5
Pom. and Toy Dogs	August 25, 26

NOTES.

Minegold Style, a miniature orange Pomeranian, has just been released from quarantine by his importer, Mr. R. F. Butler, of Campsie. "Our Dogs" states that this dog is "one of the heaviest coated oranges living, being a rich orange, wonderfully short in back. He is one of the soundest and best coloured Poms we have." The new arrival weighs 4lb. He won six first prizes at London Toy Dog Championship Show, four firsts and cup for best of all breeds at Preston.

Quite a number of local bulldog owners are exhibiting at Brisbane Bulldog Club's Show next month, at which Mr. James Perkins is judging. Sydney fanciers are also arranging for large representation at the Victorian P. and K. Show on August 3.

In another column the Victorian Poultry and Kennel Club advertises its fortieth show, which is the most comprehensive in the Commonwealth. In addition to dogs and poultry, the promoters cater for pigeons, canaries, cage birds, and cats. The show opens on August 3. Interstate entries close with Mr J. H. Egan, secretary, 424 Collins-street, Melbourne.

Buildogs, especially good ones, are the dearest commodity in the dog world. A noted young prize-winner is referred to in our business columns.

The members of the Hound and Gun Dog Club last week received their prizes won at the recent combined show. The chief specials were won by Mr. R. Mallard, best setter; H. and R. McDonall, best Cocker spaniel; Mrs. Bridgement, best field spaniel. Best fox-hound dog special was won by Mr. N. G. Dunlop, and the trophy for best hound dog by Mr. N. G. Dunlop.

At a special committee meeting of the Pomeranian and Toy Dog Club, held last Friday, it was decided to hold a two-days' show on Friday and Saturday, August 25 and 26. There is every indication that entries will be received from sister States, and that the larger part of the first day will be taken up with judging. Judges have not yet been definitely appointed. The show will be held in the dogs' pavilion at the R.A.S. grounds, the use of which has been granted by the society. It is anticipated that several new importations will be benched.

The Fox-terrier Club's show last Saturday at Brighton-le-Sands brought together one of the best collections of the breed ever seen in Australia. The imported specimens included ch. Levenside Luke, Victor Mark, Southboro' Seldonite, Wrose Nugget, Rouken, Miss Surprise, Southboro' Sadie, and Wrose Bristyes. Exhibits also came from Victoria, Queensland, and Tasmania. Mr. J. L. Watson, a prominent Victorian owner, was delighted with the all-round quality of the terriers. He compared the show, from a canine point of view, with the Melbourne Cup for racing men. Among those present in khaki were two fox-terrier fanciers, Mr. W. R. Stallwood, the club's late assistant secretary, and Sergeant Banks, who was invalided from Gallipoli.

CLUB MATTERS.

Mr. R. J. Wilson writes:—In your kennel column last Wednesday, under the heading Melbourne Patriotic Show, you state that the secretary of the V.P. and K.C. advises that for their show in August entries will be received from all persons, whether disqualified for exhibiting at unregistered shows or not. My club (F.T.C. of N.S.W.) is in receipt of a letter from the V.P. and K.C., which is even a little more emphatic than the above. In this letter I refer to, the secretary of the V.P. and K.C. writes as follows:—"Disqualifications endorsed previously by my committee for exhibiting at unaffiliated shows are now all removed." This is as it should be, and whilst it is to be regretted that the Victorian P. and K. C. ever did endorse these disqualifications, yet their committee are to be heartily congratulated that, as soon as they became convinced of the injustice thereof, they hastened to remedy the mistake which had been made.

Never quiver and quail, never falter and fail,
Wending your way thro' the stress of a gale,
For "whether it's cold or whether it's hot,
You have to weather it whether or not."
In a wondrous way the worst woes give
To a resolute heart and a smiling chiv,
As worst of coughs and colds are sure
To give to Woods' Great Peppermint Cure.—Advt.

It was agreed to form a committee, and another meeting will shortly be held, when the whole matter will be gone into more fully, and a policy laid down for suitably canvassing the district.

The late Mr. William Bear, who was found dead in bed at his home in Liverpool-street, city, on Monday, was 70 years of age. Born in London in 1846, the late Mr. Bear was specially brought to Australia 33 years ago to establish a fire brigade in Sydney. This was formed on July 1, 1884, in a building in Bathurst-street, opposite St. Andrew's Cathedral, the brigade consisting of 30 men, only four of whom are now in the service—Third Officer Watson, of Circular Quay; Furth Officer Ford, of headquarters; Divisional Officer Gorman, of Newcastle; and Head Farrier Stauchel, of headquarters station. During the 14½ years that Mr. Bear was superintendent the headquarters of the old Metropolitan Fire Brigade were transferred to the present building, in Castlereagh-street. He was also principally responsible for the establishment of the fire alarm system now in existence all over the city and suburbs. The last fire that the late Mr. Bear witnessed was that at Winn's, Limited, Oxford-street, on Saturday, two days before his death. Mr. Bear was succeeded as chief of the brigade by the late Mr. Alfred Webb.

ALLEGED MISAPPROPRIATION.

PATRIOTIC FUNDS.

At the Central Police Court yesterday John Lawes Witte-Wronge, 42, was committed for trial on three charges of fraudulent misappropriation of money collected by him for the Khaki Association. He was defended by Mr. E. Maddocks Cohen.

Detective Souter, who arrested accused at Blackheath, said that he asked him if he had received a cheque of £2 2s from a Mr. Tilley, of that town. Accused replied that he had, and that the money was at his home. He had £11 11s 10d on him when arrested. Accused later on told witness that he did not know what had become of his collecting card, but that he was sending the money, with the names, on to the secretary of the association in Sydney.

In reply to Mr. Cohen, witness said he believed the accused was a baronet, and was in receipt of an income.

John Macfarlane, the hon. secretary of the Khaki Association, stated that he sent accused three collecting cards, but nothing had been received from him but two blank cards. On Saturday last he received a letter and a money-order for £3 5s, apparently from accused.

William Robert Tilley, of Blackheath, said that in August last, at accused's request, he headed a subscription list with a cheque for £2 2s. Accused told him that he would receive an official receipt.

In reserving his defence Witte-Wronge stated that he had no intention of fraudulently misappropriating the money.

Mrs. Alice Craft, Cooper-street, Granville, writes that for five years she was really an invalid, weak in body and nerves; pronounced an incurable. She considers Clements Tonic cheated death of a victim, for it saved her life.—Advt.

Mrs. Wilson's hair was falling worse than yours, but KOKO stopped it falling in a week!

"My hair was turning grey and falling out in handfuls. Nothing I tried benefited me until I used Koko, which stopped my hair falling in a week, so that none came out on the brush, although previously I had to clear it three or four times when brushing my hair. Now my hair is getting back its soft, glossy appearance, all the nasty short hair is growing fast and curls up with the rest quite nicely."

Just brushing KOKO briskly into the scalp got those results.

Your hair will rapidly attain its fullest growth if you brush Koko briskly into the scalp twice daily and use Pi-nax Oil always before washing the hair with Pi-no Shampoo. Phenomenal growth has resulted when this simple, harmless, and pleasant treatment has been carried out systematically. If an abnormal growth is not desired, Koko should only be used occasionally, after the hair has regained its normal length and thickness.

You will find Koko delightfully clean and refreshing to use. Quite free from Oil, Grease, and Stickiness; Odourless, Clear as Crystal.

PI-NO Shampoo makes a foaming mass of creamy lather that cleanses the scalp perfectly, rinses out quickly, leaving the hair soft and silky, yet quite easy to dress.

PI-NAX Oil is a combination of three essential Hair Oils with all their stickiness and smell eliminated. PI-NAX Oil should be used always before washing the hair, especially if the hair is very dry.

THE WORLD'S GREAT WAR.

FRANCE IN WAR-TIME

A DESERTED TOWN.

SCENES OF DESOLATION.

(BY ARTHUR MASON.)

II.

LONDON, May 12.

I had been brought swiftly across the miles of France which now, an impenetrable barrier against the enemy, definitely separate him from the Paris of his desire. All through the morning the car made rapid way upon straight white roads gleaming under the springtime sun, roads that lay level upon the plains, or flung themselves upon steep ascents of hill country, or went ribboning down to the valleys below and the streams that shone silvery at the heart of them. Sometimes it ran silently across the broad spaciousness of open landscape, sometimes, hooting and blustering, it groped a difficult way through the narrow thoroughfares of towns and villages. For a part of its time it was in and out of orchards, and deep within the white beauty of their blossoming trees, and once it travelled miles of noble woodland, where for long it had a path of velvet among the fallen leaves of last year's autumn and beneath the miracle of the foliage of this year's spring. Then suddenly I was within sight of that I had come to see—and the sense of mere loveliness of surrounding faded and dissolved within the knowledge of sterner things.

One does not, however, come all at once upon the front and the firing line. On the contrary almost every mile of the journey towards it is preparation for what is hidden there. For one thing, there are the graves. The history book will tell you how near to Paris men fought and died not long ago—and where they fell there they lie, some of them but beneath rough heaps of stone and bare mounds of earth, some of them named and noted, half pathetically, half gloriously, with a cross of wood, and a garland of flowers and a tiny flutter of tricolour flag. There is a grip at the heart of you when you first see a soldier's grave—out on the green grass of the spring of the year, where the fields are ploughed afresh, and the new seed is sown, and the women and the old men work quietly above the brave dead who saved for them their France. For that first grave comes upon you unawares. It leaps grimly and alone out of the wayside, at your very hand. It is solitary within the space of the green fields, a mere speck in the landscape—but for you it fills momentarily the whole earth.

Then the grip of it is eased and the sadness of it fades. For there are many graves, and the dead within them belong to the past, and the living are all about you, and things present and things to come, crowding out the dead. Presently the open fields and the graves give place to crowded roadways and soldiers on the march, and soldiers in towns and villages that seem filled with them. And as you journey there are more soldiers, and still more, and vehicles that go piled up with the paraphernalia of soldiers and the munitions of war, and soon, too, there are before your eyes the very implements of battle, guns and other arms, and wire, and heaps of wood that have been cut into stakes for the support of wire and the trenches behind the wire. And there are strange scars in the earth around you that are the trenches themselves behind the line—signs and portents in face of which your car goes ever more slowly and is constantly halted by barriers, or by men in arms who challenge its passage. And all at once it leaves the road and goes winding within screened and secret ways where the soldiers on duty are a cautious spread of waiting men, and the captive balloons that have hung in the high air before your eyes for an hour past suddenly come clear and still more close. They are above the lines. You are abreast of them. In the depths of a hidden place your car turns once again, and stops. You alight and walk a step or two. You enter what seems to be a doorway in the road. As you do so, a sudden shock of noise behind you splits the air, and a long drawn-out swish-ish-sh of hissing sound passes high above your head. That is a shell. You are at the front.

It is both like and unlike what you expected. For me, at any rate, the devastation of war was at its most real as I walked, presently, in the old French town which is at this point of the long line of battle. Of its former and substantial place, its buildings of solid stone once stood four-square within their picturesquely comfortable streets. They have been battered and broken into wreckage and ruin. They lie in indescribable sprawling heaps of dust and debris or they stand, if at all form and substantiality have hopelessness, gaunt and hideously awry, melancholy gaping fragments of shattered wall. And on a hill above the town is a great white church, lifting there, into beauty like that of an encircling flower. It is one of the cathedrals of France, and part of the glory of that golden age of architecture when men were inspired by the vision that was about them to expression of themselves in miracles of soaring stone. It still stands, and still is beautiful. But it has suffered something of the havoc of battle about it. For on either side of it there is such a rent in its roof and wall as leaves it open to the sky, while upon the floor of its nave tons of broken stones are heaped high in the confusion of their fall. Impressive, too, and bearing the unmistakable weight of war, is the present desolation of this once busy town. Street after street of it is empty and silent. Houses that have escaped the ravage are shuttered and barred. The people have vanished. One walked overwhelmed by this sight of a dead city—for it seemed as truly dead and of the past as the evacuated splendour of Pompeii.

In respect of the living present, the front is less impressive than one would think. There is something of unreality about it, about the war itself even in this brooding silence of it, that is broken at intervals by the sound of a gun fired out of and into the invisible and the blue of the palpable distant shell. Visitors are, of course, taken only to the less active points in the line,—there is that, for explanation, although, as a matter of fact, any point may become active at any moment. This place had for the time being the appearance of quietness. It was never less than wise, for all that, to go carefully about it. I walked, for instance, across a little bridge where I was told to walk quickly and warily. I was warned to hurry at a point where enemy machine guns commanded an open space. I was allowed to peep over a parapet at the German trenches, but only on condition that I peeped quickly, and as quickly retired. And I went in and out of miles of communication trench, and among dug-outs burrowed deep and far into the underground—and so to the front trenches, where the enemy's position was distant no more than a few hundred yards. Even so close, there was something less than real about it all. The trenches of the enemy were there well enough—snaky convolutions of bleak earth showing upon the green grass. But there was no sign of life about them, and as little sign of death. The sun shone, the trees fluttered in the breeze, the song of a lark rose upon the clear air. One needed the transforming aid of imagination to picture the black background of that peaceful scene and the flame and havoc it concealed.

The enormous labour given to the construction of the trenches, their ingenuity, their range, and their strength must, however, be seen to be believed, and I was struck by the discovery among the varied substance of their outer reinforcements, of drills and harrows and other agricultural implements. It suggested a truly dramatic reversal of the ideal, in which swords are to be ploughshares and spears shall be pruning hooks. And best of all, I was impressed by the calibre of the French soldier. I saw him in large numbers, and in the real essence of him as a first-class fighter for France. I found him a magnificent sturdy of build. He is as hard as nails, and as fit for fight as man can be. He is cheerful, too, to the point of gaiety, and his hatred of the Boche is his ruling passion. He is in all regards a great soldier, and having seen him I can understand what the set of his teeth in the defence of Verdun must mean to his enemy.

It was good to have been at the French front if only to see the French soldier, and as I rushed down the last lap of the journey that night, and through the gates of Paris into the crowded life of the great city, I was more sure than ever that it will remain, for all the effort of the enemy against it, the Paris of France.

THE RAG-TIME ARMY.

TEL-EL-KEBIR.

(BY TROOPER BLUEGUM.)

To France!

France, the land of chivalry and Charlemagne; the lotus-land of Louis XIV.; the Republican land of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity; the present-day land of heroism and stern determination.

That's where the Australians have gone—some of them. So the eyes of Australia will now be switched off Egypt and focussed with keenest interest on the zig-zag battle line stretching from the North Sea to the borders of Switzerland.

But in Egypt, mystical Egypt, the scorching land of sin, sand, sorrow, sore eyes, Sirdars, Senussi, sphinx, and soldiers, there are still over — thousand Australians. Antony of old having visions of Cleopatra cried: "In the East my pleasure lies!" But this cry found no echo in the breasts of the Anzacs returning from Gallipoli. It was simply "In the East our duty lies."

When, after the great evacuation, the Australians—foiled but not disgraced, and still undaunted—returned to Egypt, there followed a strenuous period of reorganisation and preparation for the next campaign. Away out on the desert, beyond the cooling influence of the Delta oasis, beyond the distracting influences of Cairo, the big camp was pitched. It was winter. The nights were bitterly cold. The days were fine and bright. The men worked with a will. The depleted Anzac battalions were reinforced by a steady stream of new men from the Commonwealth. A goodly percentage of experienced soldiers from Gallipoli were drafted into the new battalions. The experience of Mena the previous year was repeated, and the new divisions were moulded into magnificent fighting machines. General Birdwood tried their mettle, and they were not found wanting. They were almost as good as the old First Australian Division. Then they were packed off to France.

The Light Horse regiments experienced a similar process of reorganisation. Their squadrons, sadly thinned by death and wounds and disease, were again brought up to fighting strength by new arrivals. Once again they got their horses. Trench warfare had not been to their liking. As each trooper vaulted once more into the saddle he exclaimed, "Richard is himself again." Squadron manoeuvres in the crisp morning air were a delight. The days of foot-slogging and gravel-crushing were past and gone. No need any longer to pine for their chargers, or cry "A horse! My kingdom for a horse." The bushmen had come again into their kingdom. Some were sent west to thrash the Senussi. Others went east to guard the canal. One brigade went ——, where, the censor won't say.

Summer swept down swiftly and relentlessly on the scorching sands of Egypt. In their own appointed spheres infantry, artillery, engineers, Light Horse, and all the rest of the Australian Imperial Force were doing their job without much fuss or publicity. Now and then a few lines appeared in the English papers. But back in the big camp at Tel-el-Kebir the hard gruelling work of training reinforcements went on. Col. Spencer Browne was commandant at the base, and under his direction the new infantry and new mounted were put through their facings, and drafted out to the firing line. With the advent of summer the men discarded most of their clothing. They wore shorts and helmets, and mighty little else. Parades and manoeuvres and route marches were held in the cool of the morning and evening. In the heat of the day the troops rested, slept, played cards, swapped lies, or wrote to the girls they left behind them. And because they sauntered about the camp half-naked, or clad in odd garments, they called themselves the "Rag-time Army." They would not stand outsiders calling them so, but they could libel themselves with impunity. When the guards and the pickets mounted they were spick and span, neat, and well groomed as the Kiwi Lancers. But off duty they loved comfort. They were a tatterdemalion crowd—a rag-time army.

Little drafts of a dozen or a score or a hundred soldiers would every now and then blow in to Tel-el-Kebir from England or Malta or Alexandria, or other war hospitals. These were the Anzacs. They welcomed cordially the newcomers from Australia. All and sundry are settling down steadily to fit themselves for the next campaign.

The hot wind blows on the dusty plain, the red sun burns above, and at midday we cast no shadows. Sand permeates everywhere. Here where years ago the British army defeated the same enemy, the oversea Britian are preparing for their share in the titanic struggle. In the early morning the plain is dotted with groups of soldiers. Troops, squadrons, and regiments; platoons, companies, and battalions march and drill where a generation back their forbears fought and died. Like a huge centipede some battalion streaks along the skyline, the sun glinting on their rifles and throwing fantastic shadows over the sand. In a cloud of dust some troop of Light Horsemen arrives from nowhere, or departs on an unknown errand. Here and there are evidences of the unchanging East; a string of camels on the rise; a few mud hovels; a glint of green by some oasis; a few date palms flanking the Canal; some little donkeys with big burdens; a mud buffalo; some Bedouins.

ANZACS IN FRANCE.

THEIR FIRST ENCOUNTER.

SOLDIERLY QUALITIES PRAISED.

A splendid tribute is paid to the Australians in France by the special correspondent of the London "Morning Post," who, writing under date of May 9 from the British headquarters in France, says:—

Short as has been the time since the Anzacs have gone up into the firing line here they have already achieved their hearts' desire and blooded their steel on real Germans. It occurred a couple of nights ago. One of those usual Hun reconnoitring parties armed with bombs came across to have a look at our trenches. When such a party gets near enough its object is to bomb the men out of a section of trench. One of two things is usually done; the men stick to the trench and run up a casualty list or clear out from the section of trench, in which latter case the enemy could obtain what information he might be after. The Anzacs took a middle course, for they sprang out from their trench and met the bombers in the "No Man's Land." A very pretty fight followed, and seeing their party hard pressed the Germans sent up some more to support. So did the Australians. Again the Huns sent more, and so did the Australians, and eventually drove back the raiders to their trenches with pretty substantial losses in killed and a great many more with bayonet wounds. It was a neat thing, and has pleased the Australians immensely. Since their landing in Marseilles only a week or two ago, no time has been lost in getting the Anzacs into the thick of it in the firing line, and they may take it as a compliment that they have been given one of the most famous sectors of our front, where the need for vigilance and all good soldierly qualities has never been lacking. The Anzacs are one of the most useful contingents that have come out, because since their preliminary training they have also gone through a long period of the most severe kind of warfare. Little wonder that an army of such tempered metal has been utilised almost at once.

At the same time, of course, they have something to learn before they become thoroughly adapted to the kind of fighting that they encounter in France. Heavy artillery in such profusion and the multitude of deadly trench weapons are more or less new to them in practice. Above all, they are busy learning the tricks of the Huns. The Turk, or Jacko, as they nick-named him, is a gentleman, they all agree so; they have had no experience of the kind of tactics our more cultured friend Fritz has evolved. As a General said to me to-day, the Australian is not naturally a tricky fighter. He is, of course, trained in the art of war, and, as a sportsman, knows all about taking cover and trying to get a safe sight on the other fellow, but his chief preference is for a vigorous, rough-and-tumble, stand-up fight in the open. They have a high standard in musketry, and a great many of them make excellent snipers. These have been doing good work already and have caused quite a considerable number of casualties. It is curious that when we talk of casualties from sniping they may always be taken as accurate, for there is a sort of point of honour among the sniping specialists that they do not report a hit unless they are absolutely sure of it.

The first business of the Anzacs has been to get very hard at work putting their defences into superfine order. From their experiences in Gallipoli they have become fastidious in the matter of trenches. Many of them were expatiating to me to-day upon the wonderful broad communication trenches deep down in the hillsides, the underground galleries, the trenches sometimes 20ft to 30ft deep, so that they had to climb up stairways to get to the firing platforms. The unfortunate thing here is that when you dig down a foot or two you come into water. At all events, they are setting about their business with enthusiasm.

And the Australians are delighted with their new surroundings. Everything is a joy, for with all their praise of their Gallipoli trenches they had to live the lives of rabbits. They could go nowhere to rest out of gunfire. They could not even bathe on the beach freely for fear of shrapnel. A major told me gleefully to-day that with a carefully hoarded pint of precious water in Gallipoli he had brushed his teeth, shaved, washed, washed two handkerchiefs, and had a fairish attempt upon a towel.

On all hands among the Anzacs one hears the expression of joy at billets with real beds in them—and furniture—not to speak of hot baths, because our bathing establishments at the rest bases are excellently organised, and they are making full use of them. The very fact of being able to get back to rest out of gunshot is only less pleasing than the ulterior prospect of getting leave and going to England for it. Why, the very fact that they have their own horse transport waggons is soothing after mule packs. So that the Anzacs are throwing themselves with a hearty enthusiasm into their work in France that is stimulated by the recollection of hard times.

Dr. Grenfell, of Labrador, who has had three months' hard work in the hospitals at the front, says it is amusing to notice what a ridiculously small thing will sometimes stop a bullet. He tells of a man who was shot at when he was standing with his hand on his hip. The bullet went right through his hand, making a clean and easily-healed wound. The difficulty was to discover what happened to it after it passed through the man's hand, until someone dived into his trousers pocket. There the bullet was found loose, having been stopped by twopence halfpenny in coppers.

LESSONS OF WAR.

FRANCE FINDS HER SOUL.

ARCHBISHOP DONALDSON'S HOPE.

Interesting references to the war were made recently by Archbishop Donaldson in the course of an address to the Queensland Anglican Synod in Brisbane. The Archbishop is a brother of Sir Frederick Donaldson, K.C.B., the famous engineer, who, with Lord Kitchener, was lost in the Hampshire.

Of course Germany was elated over the sinking of the Hampshire, said the Archbishop, but such calamities only spurred our people to action, and he prophesied that presently they would feel something like surprise that a loss of that kind, apart from personal considerations, made so little difference. They would not think he was detracting one iota from the grandeur of Lord Kitchener's career, from the marvellous service he had rendered to his country in making the new army, or from the splendour and romance of his end, when he urged them not to lay overmuch stress upon his loss. It was not men who mattered; it was the general policy of which they were part; it was the spirit they breathed; it was the nation's soul. That mattered as nothing else did. The blows of adversity were needed for their proud and obstinate spirit. He was watching with open eyes as the troubles fell, because it seemed to him that through them alone could their redemption draw nigh.

Dr. Donaldson went on to refer to the account of a visit to the headquarters of the French army at Verdun by a military expert, and said that the force against which Germany was vainly shattering its strength was not a barrier of bayonets or earthworks or artillery; it was that indefinable thing which the French themselves called moral. It was a spiritual quality, and it was just another instance of the superiority of spiritual over material forces.

"The cause of France to the Frenchman is no material thing," continued the Archbishop; "it has come to be a spiritual aspiration; it is the passion of a spiritualised nation." The words scratched by a French soldier on the door of his dug-out set forth that spirit with touching directness:—"My body to the earth, my soul to God, my heart to France." He (the speaker) had spoken of our Allies because it was easier then to speak of ourselves, and partly also because the thought of France thus finding her soul fired him with a great ambition for their own Fatherland, for their own race. They were less articulate than the French, and their schooling of late had been different from theirs. Nevertheless they had hearts and souls, for all their stolid demeanour, and were not such worms of earth as to remain untouched by all they had seen and heard. Outwardly the blows of adversity simply stiffened their resolve.

Continuing, the Archbishop said: "There is only one thought which brings hope, and that is that these sufferings may perchance be the birth-throes of a new and better world. If the nations of the world can find their souls through sacrifice; if our own race can heed the warning of calamity and get back to the path of duty which we had left, if the world be found hereafter a purified world, then there is consolation and hope." They had not looked to the future, he remarked. They had lived from hand to mouth, and had drifted passively upon the tide of events. Their future would only shape itself aright if in the name of God they shaped their ideal and worked towards it with a positive and consistent zeal. There clearly was the immediate and characteristic task of the Christian Church. Had the church to-day a lead to offer to the nation? What was the spiritual objective before them? Even to-day they sought conversion; they sought a new spirit in the nation, a new atmosphere in their common life; and it must show itself in at least three directions. Firstly, the soldiers of their army, when they returned, had a right to expect something better than the utterly worldly and material reception they now met. The soldier returning at the end of the war must find himself at once in touch with something spiritual; he must be conscious that something was moving beneath the surface at home to which his best self responded; an atmosphere in which his own spiritual aspirations would be fostered and conserved. Secondly, the new spirit would profoundly affect the negotiations for peace. The future peace of the world depended upon the spirit in which the statesmen framed their proposals. Unless he was greatly mistaken, the treaty of peace, when it came, would differ from all that had gone before it, in that the governing factor would be not the interests of any class or dynasty, but the will of the nations and peoples concerned. And again, the new spirit would work as a solvent upon the besetting sins which were so greatly embedded in their national character. The drink evil was already upon their conscience, and he was heartily glad to see that the movement in favour of closing the liquor bars at 6 p.m. was gaining so steadily in the State. Perhaps presently there might be some parallel awaking of conscience about those other and deeper sins which stained their society. In a word, their objective was a new spirit in the nation; a new and purer atmosphere in which evil things would naturally wither and fade.

MIDNIGHT EXPLOIT.

STORMING A HILL IN EAST AFRICA.

THRILLING STORY.

A Johannesburg telegram to the "Cape times" says:—

In a recent despatch General Smuts specially mentioned the splendid work of the 7th Regiment, under Colonel Freeth and Major Thompson, in the storming of Taveta Nek, and Sergeant Jones of that regiment, in a letter dated March 14, gives a thrilling account of the operations.

"I was one of the small band under Colonel Freeth who finally stormed the Nek, so naturally feel very proud of what has been done. We have the Germans on the run now, and we are going to keep them going.

"The Germans were in a very strong position at Taveta Nek, and it was imperative that the position should be taken. We were in reserve, and at dark on Friday night last we were ordered to attack the position. As soon as the enemy found out they opened fire on us.

"It was terrific, but we held on, and when half a mile off we were ordered to fix bayonets, and cheer after cheer from our men rent the air, with howls of defiance from the enemy. The moon was shining brightly, and the glint of bayonets as we advanced was a fine sight, but it also showed our position to the enemy, who poured out a perfect cannonade from every conceivable kind of weapon.

"For three hours we held our ground, and did not give way an inch. At last we got the order 'Advance,' and again we cheered and pressed forward. A shout by me, 'Are we downhearted?' brought the response from a thousand throats, 'No.' We started 'Tipperary,' and this brought the response from the enemy, 'Come on, we'll give you 'Tipperary.'

"About 11.30 p.m.—the moon being under a cloud—Colonel Freeth called on his men to advance to the Nek. I was on the extreme right with my platoon. The colonel led the way, and we followed on.

"With a dash we made for the top of the hill, and reached it. We had taken possession of Taveta Nek. It was nearly 1 a.m., and all were tired to the point of collapse, but we took steps to hold the hill till morning. It was not necessary to tell the men to keep awake. They fully realised our perilous position. I shall never forget that night.

"Major Thompson, in the meantime, was fighting his way to the hill on the opposite side of the Nek, and at 5 a.m. had taken the position with 150 men. Other regiments cheered us to the echo when they knew what we had done. We will smash the Germans up before long now."—"Central News."

SARAH BERNHARDT.

VISIT TO THE TRENCHES.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt has just paid her first visit to the front, where she gave six performances in three days (says the Paris correspondent of the London "Daily Telegraph"). Her headquarters were Toul, and she motored round, appearing successively in six different improvised theatres, some less than a quarter of a mile from the front in Argonne and not far from Verdun. To soldiers fresh from fighting she recited her speeches from "Les Cathedrales" and the poem by her granddaughter, which you know in London but which we have not yet heard here.

Like everyone who comes back from the front, Madame Sarah Bernhardt is full of devotion and enthusiasm for the French troops. "I spent three days among heroes," she says, "among men and youths many of whom had performed incredible feats, and who blushed when I was told about them. I remember, for instance, a young aviator who had several medals and whose military cross were seven palm branches. His chief, introducing him, said, 'When he gets the eighth palm branch I wonder where he will put it.' The boy blushed and said, laughingly, 'I shall have to have them made smaller.' What splendid and charming fellows they are! I never had so deep an impression of the sacredness of art. I was proud to say beautiful verse before such men, and should have liked to die in their midst. I saw wounded whom the doctors wanted to tend. 'No, no,' they said, 'we are all right; give us a few minutes more; wait till Madame Sarah has finished reciting.' No audience of kings and great ladies could be worth this audience of soldiers of France. We came to comfort them, and it was we, on the contrary, who came away full of their faith and enthusiasm.

"I succeeded in inducing General —— to let me go near Pont-a-Mousson, to a place which the Boches generally bombard. He made objections at first, then paid me this handsome compliment: 'Well, let us go, you are worthy, Madame, of going into the danger zone.' But I had no luck. That day the Boches did not shoot. It was better, of course, as none of our party was wounded, but from my own humble point of view I was rather vexed. My one regret, too, was, I confess, that I could not take a gun myself and shoot at the Boches when I was 600 yards away from them. I have never had luck, by the way; wherever I went in England and Scotland, where I had a reception I will always be proud of, I always missed the Zeppelin raids. You know I don't mind, but we took steps to hoist the hill till morning. It was not necessary to tell the men to keep awake. They fully realised our perilous position. I shall never forget that night.

"Major Thompson, in the meantime, was fighting his way to the hill on the opposite side of the Nek, and at 5 a.m. had taken the position with 150 men. Other regiments cheered us to the echo when they knew what we had done. We will smash the Germans up before long now."—"Central News."

DEFENCES OF ARGONNE.

MEDIEVAL PRINCIPLES AND MODERN METHODS.

MOATS AND FORTRESSES.

The last time I visited the Argonne was some eight or nine months ago, and perhaps nowhere on the French front could one find a finer example of the extraordinary evolution that the defensive organisation of trench warfare has undergone as a result of experience, writes Mr. H. Warner Allen, the representative of the British Press with the French army.

Not so many months ago this country was regarded as absolutely impossible for an invader. Trenches were difficult to dig, since water was very near the surface, and it was believed that the thickness of the undergrowth and the broken nature of the ground were sufficient to prevent any advance on the part of the enemy. The result was that there were practically no barbed wire entanglements, no continuous system of trenches except in the advanced lines, and no shelters dug deep in the rock to protect the defenders from bombardment. Modern warfare, however, has shown that natural difficulties, if they are not supplemented by artificial defences, are insufficient as a barrier.

The French front from the North Sea to Switzerland was so strongly fortified, thanks to science, and the military engineers, that the Argonne Forest, with all its thickets and ravines and natural cover, appeared to the German High Command easier of assault than the plains of Flanders and the bare rolling hills of Champagne. The result was that it was here that the Crown Prince's army made one of the greatest German offensive efforts up to the time of the attack on Verdun. The valour of the French troops took the place of barbed wire and earthworks, and such insignificant advance as the enemy could make was dearly paid for.

A LESSON NOT LOST.

But the lesson was not lost upon the French, and they have since been working hard to convert the Argonne Forest into an impregnable fortress. There has been a change of generals, and new ideas, based on experience, have been given their full effect. There was a school which declared that barbed wire entanglements were prejudicial from the point of view of the offensive, since they made it difficult for the infantry to advance from the trenches. But to-day it is admitted that without barbed wire and that organised system of trenches which has taken the place of the castles and fortresses of the past no troops can hope for success, whether they are standing on the defensive or gathering their forces to attack the enemy.

To-day no part of the French line is more highly organised than the defences of the Argonne. From the nature of the ground continuous trenches are impossible and undesirable. The system adopted is that of a series of centres of resistance, mutually interdependent. Wherever there is a hill there is a fortress. On the higher hills there have been built citadels that command the lower eminences, every one of which is fortified. Before each earthwork miles and miles of barbed wire have been set, and woe betide the enemy that attempts an infantry charge blindly through the brushwood.

The fortresses themselves, behind their barbed wire defences, differ not at all from a mediaeval castle, except for one thing—the walls of a castle were raised many feet above the ground; the walls of a modern fortress are buried many feet below the soil. It came as a surprise to visit one of these earthworks on an important hill, and suddenly to discover that it was surrounded by a moat. The main gate to the fortress was provided with a drawbridge across the moat, which was filled, not with water, but with a bristling array of chevaux de frise that boded ill for the unhappy Germans who fell upon their points. The moat was carefully concealed.

THE DRAWBRIDGE.

The drawbridge worked on the mediaeval principle. Thanks to a cunning system of weights, it could be raised by a touch of a hand in a few seconds' time. There was no portcullis, but in its stead there was a wooden door, duly loop-holed, against which sandbags could be piled to resist any attack. The sandbags were ready in the passage behind, and in three minutes half a dozen men could have backed the door with them. In the ancient castle the gates gave access to a courtyard on the ground level. In the modern fortress drawbridge and gate open on a narrow dark corridor that slopes down into the bowels of the earth.

There, under 20 or 30 feet of soil and rock, the garrison can placidly await the end of bombardment, knowing that science has not yet forged the shell that can reach them. The last two years have shown the terrific power of heavy artillery and modern explosives, but at the same time it has been demonstrated that their effect is, if one considers the extent of the battlefields of to-day, extremely local. To shell the French from their positions in the Argonne would need such a wealth of guns and such an expenditure of ammunition as has never yet been imagined, and it is likely that such an effort would produce results of unspeakable insignificance. "Perhaps," said one of the generals in this sector to me, "they might get through if they liked to pay enough in men and ammunition; but one thing I am sure of—the price they would have to pay would be a hundred times heavier than any success they could gain."

SOLDIERS' WELCOME.

IN CATHEDRAL GROUNDS.

OPENING TO-DAY.

The new Soldiers' Club, or Soldiers' Welcome as it is called, in the grounds of St. Andrew's Cathedral, will be formally opened this afternoon.

For some time past workmen have been busy erecting the building just inside the Cathedral gates, at the corner of George and Bathurst streets, and yesterday Mrs. Wright, the wife of the Archbishop, and a number of lady helpers, were occupied in washing crockery, sweeping floors, putting up bunting, arranging chairs and tables, and generally giving the building finishing touches to the interior. The institution, which is being run by the Home Mission Society, with Archdeacon Martin as secretary, will be similar to one already in existence in Melbourne, and judging by the success of the latter, should have plenty of soldiers to cater for. Refreshments will be provided at a moderate cost, a cup of tea being obtainable for a penny, coffee or cocoa 2d, cake or bread and butter 2d, and so on. It will be open each day from noon till 10 p.m. On Sunday's there will be a short service, with hymn-singing, and refreshments will be served free. On most afternoons or evenings there will be music, and from time to time concerts will probably be arranged.

A feature of the new resort will be that soldiers can be accompanied by girl friends or relatives up to 7 p.m., on week days, or after church service on Sunday evenings. This arrangement will doubtless be much appreciated, as the premises are airy and comfortable, and many a soldier will find them convenient for afternoon tea with a lady friend.

The building, though only a temporary structure of wood and fibro-cement, with very little brickwork, is picturesque and attractive looking. It has been put up in sections, so that when no longer required for the soldiers, it may be used somewhere in the diocese as a temporary church or hall. Mr. Burcham Clamp, the architect, who designed the Church of England Club at Liverpool Camp, prepared the plans and supervised the construction, giving his services gratuitiously in each case. The cost of the building, with furniture, will be about £650. Of this sum about £400 is in hand, and a good deal of furniture has been given. Mrs. Wright, assisted by other ladies, has been collecting donations, and over £250 has come through her hands. It is hoped to realise a useful sum by the collection at to-day's opening function, and once the initial cost is covered, it is expected that the place will be practically self-supporting, as the ladies connected with the movement are all voluntary helpers. Some of the wants of the institution at present are a small-size billiard table, a bagatelle board, easy chairs, and games. Archdeacon Martin stated yesterday that the Soldiers' Welcome would have been in existence before had it not been for the necessity of getting the plans passed by the City Council, and then having to obtain the sanction of Parliament under the conditions of the grant under which the Cathedral property is held.

The opening function this afternoon will take place at 4 p.m., and the fact that over 80 per cent. of the invitations to be present have been accepted, is an indication of the interest that is being taken in the movement.

The Cathedral choir and clergy will meet in the Cathedral and march outside, where an open-air service will be held in front of the new building. The hymn, "O God Our Help in Ages Past," will be sung, and short prayers will be offered for the King, our soldiers and sailors, and the Empire. The Archbishop (Dr. Wright) will deliver an address, after which the hymn, "Through the Night of Doubt and Sorrow," will be sung, and a collection taken up. Then the Archbishop will present a golden key to Colonel D. Miller, District Inspector of Camps, who will formally declare the building open. The band of the Engineers will play in the Cathedral grounds before and after the ceremony. Colonel Miller has shown great interest in the Church of England Club at Liverpool, as well as similar institutions, and it is in recognition of this that he is being asked to perform this afternoon's ceremony.

FROM THE FRONT.

AUSTRALIANS IN FRANCE.

NEVER DOWNHEARTED.

Private James White, writing from France to his mother, Mrs. A. White, of Waverley, says:—"So far, the rain it raineth every day, and the mud is awful. If the weather would only clear up, there wouldn't be much to complain about. Every now and then bullets whizz overhead, or bury themselves in the sand bags, or, what would be a more appropriate term at present, the mud bags. One of our grievances against the enemy is that they keep up their fusillade during our meal hours. We don't reckon that is fair! We often think of the great task the first British regiments had at the beginning of the war. Our trenches are ready-made for us, but they had to make their's and fight like fury all the time. I take off my hat to those British soldiers. When the big guns are really busy, it is a bad look out for your nerves, if you are a nervous subject. With all this terrible warfare going on the men keep up their spirits wonderfully, and never get downhearted. I have had some very narrow escapes, and feel sure I must have been born under a lucky star."

THE ELUSIVE AEROPLANE.

Private R. Matthias, writing from France to his mother, who resides in Darling-street, Balmain, says:—"We were glad to get away from Egypt. In travelling through France to our destination we were in the train for 62 hours, but the journey was not monotonous. We noticed going along that a great deal of the work on the farms and at the small railway stations was done by women. We have been in the trenches for some weeks. It is a bit quiet where we are. Sometimes one doesn't hear a shot or shell explosion for a quarter of an hour. The other day I saw hundreds of shots fired at an aeroplane, but none of them got home. They are very difficult targets. . . . This is a hard, rough life, it makes men; and when we get back we can look anyone in the face, and say that we did our little bit, anybow."

"ALWAYS SOMETHING DOING."

Private Harry Lozell, of Forbes, writing under date of May 3, from France, says:—"We have been in and out of the trenches here since April 16. During the first 10 days it rained, and there was no cover whatever. It is impossible to make a shell station owing to the ground being so wet. Even the trenches have to be built up; unlike Gallipoli, where one had to dig down. The enemy are not too 'stingy' with their shells either. About 400 high explosives came over the other day in a few minutes, luckily with only a few casualties. The Tommies, when we first relieved them, told us that it was a very quiet place, but evidently the Germans found out that the Australians were in, and they gave it to us hot and heavy. They also put the gas over twice, but the helmets (two), which we always carry, are a safeguard against it. It's 'good night' if you don't have these about. We are only 12 hours from London. We are all promised furlough to there soon. There is always something doing."

DOGS OF WAR.

The value of dogs in war was recognised on the occasion of the annual prize distribution of the French Society for the Protection of Animals (says the Paris correspondent of the "Morning Post"). Fifteen dogs that have seen service at the front, and proved of conspicuous value in connection with the war, were decorated with gold collars. Three of these dogs are as well known to the public as though they were popular aviators. One of them, called "Pend l'Air," saved its master at Roclincourt. Another, called "Loustic," distinguished himself at the front by his intelligence, and by the valuable services he rendered to his unit. "Pyram," a third, saved a French battalion by drawing attention to the approach of a large German column, whose presence was unsuspected. He attracted his master's notice by barking, and the officer, discovering the enemy, sent back a note tied to the dog's collar. "Pyram" returned to the French trenches, and the alarm was given.

A special war prize was awarded to the aviator Marcel Thirouin, who saved a lost child in his aeroplane, and as he was leaving the ground brought with him, too, the little boy's favourite dog.

ALLEGED SLANDER.

MR. GRIFFITH'S CLAIM.

HOTEL BAR CONVERSATION.

The hearing was continued yesterday at the Darlinghurst Causes Court, before Mr. Justice Ferguson and a jury of twelve, of the suit brought by Arthur Griffith, a member of the Government, against Henry Combellack, licensee of the Assembly Hotel, corner of Phillip and Hunter streets, for £2000, for alleged slander, which he said was embodied in a conversation between Combellack and G. A. Jones and H. J. Webb on February 29 last.

Mr. Shand, K.C., and Mr. Broomfield (instructed by Messrs. John Williamson and Son) appeared for Griffith; and Mr. J. C. Gannon, K.C., and Mr. Sheridan (instructed by Messrs. Biddulph and Salenger) for the defendant.

Isabella Combellack, wife of the defendant, said she had been in court when Mr. Shand made his opening address, during the course of which Mr. Gannon requested her to leave the court, and she knew then for the first time that she was to be called as a witness.

Mr. Sheridan: Did you meet Jones, Nicholson, and Webb on the occasion they met in your husband's hotel and had a conversation with him?—Yes; I had been out shopping, and when I returned Mr. Jones and his companions were leaving the premises.

Was Mr. Jones indignant?—No; on the contrary, when I asked him how he was, he replied, "I am quite well; I have had a most enjoyable morning. We have had a fine conversation, and that is just what I do like."

He was a regular attendant at your hotel?—Very regular.

It is suggested that when you arrived home you found your husband engaged in angry dispute with Mr. Jones and his friends, and that you put your hand on his shoulder to restrain him?—I did not do anything at all like that. On the contrary, they were very friendly towards one another.

What day of the week was this?—On a Thursday, early in March.

Mr. Shand: You know that it has been given in evidence for the plaintiff that this conversation happened on a Tuesday?—I know that it was on a Thursday, because of the rules of the household. I go out on Thursdays, but it would be impossible for me to leave the hotel on a Tuesday morning. I know it was Thursday for a further reason, that Miss Williams would be on duty on Thursday morning.

A CONVERSATION DETAILED.

Ada Williams, barmaid, in the employ of the defendant, said that the three men, Jones, Webb, and Nicholson, came to the hotel about 10.45 a.m. on Thursday, which she thought was March 9. Jones introduced his companions to the licensee, alluding to Webb as "Captain Webb, who is aspiring for Parliamentary honours at the forthcoming elections." Witness served them with all the drinks they had—five—and overheard while doing so all the conversation that was engaged in. Webb asked Combellack how the closing down of the hotels suited him, and Jones broke in, "You publicans must have been giving Holman a bit for the way he has been sticking to you." Combellack's answer was, "I do not think so, or I would have heard of it." Webb ventured the remark, "But you publicans are a good-hearted mob, as a rule, are you not?" Combellack said he doubted that, and quoted an instance of a man who had sold out of his house a short time after paying his subscription to the association, and then wrote and asked for a refund of the subscription. Webb, however, went on to say "They are having a good lot to say about Holman at present." Combellack replied, "I have never heard anything about him. I would not say anything about Holman after the way he stuck to us publicans on the liquor question." Jones asked Combellack directly, "Well, Harry, what is your opinion about Holman and his party on the whole?" The defendant retorted, "Don't you think you should know them better; you were among them at one time?" Webb volunteered the statement, "Well, I hear plenty about Holman; they are talking about him and Australia Day. They reckon he got a cut out of it, and sent Mrs. Holman to America to invest some of the money." Combellack looked up, and said, "Who is saying that?" Webb returned, "Everybody; the man in the street." The defendant said to him, "Men in public life are all well talked about." The party had then had three drinks, and Combellack, answering a call of the front barman, went down into the cellar. Jones and Webb immediately engaged in a conversation in an undertone. Shortly afterwards Webb said, "How long is the boss likely to be away?" At their request she called him back from the cellar "to have a drink." When this was served Webb pursued the conversation, saying, "Do you know Griffith at all?" Combellack informed him, "I have never seen the man. Do you know him?" Webb replied, "Yes; I have known him for some years; knew him when he was a school teacher in the country town where I lived. What I was going to ask you was whether he was not mixed up in some land scandals and took some bribes." Combellack answered, "I do not know that; I am sure." Jones then said, "Do you not know something about bribery in connection with a counter-lunch question, Harry?" Combellack told him, "I never had occasion to bribe anyone. I tell you what I do know—I did give three guineas on one occasion to a couple of collectors." Jones asked him, "Who got it? Don't you know?" Combellack replied, "All I know is that it went up there" (indicating Parliament House). The customers then prepared to leave the hotel, having a final drink, making the fifth in an hour. Before going Jones, leaning on the counter, told witness how he had enjoyed the morning's conversation. Combellack wished "Captain" Webb every success in the elections, and with other friendly wishes they shook hands and parted.

A GOOD MEMORY.

Mr. Broomfield (cross-examining): You have given us the details of the conversation which you say took place. You have a good memory?—Very good; it is my one redeeming feature.

Ah! You took great notice of the conversation?—Yes; I was very suspicious that morning. My suspicion was aroused by the leading questions they were throwing out to Mr. Combellack.

Anything unusual in such a conversation?—Yes; I could not understand why they wanted Mr. Combellack's opinion about these public men. I thought, from the start, they were out to catch somebody or someone.

Did you tell Mr. Combellack of your suspicion?—No; they parted so friendly, and Mr. Jones was so nice about how he had enjoyed himself that I dismissed the thought, thinking I had a bad mind.

Did the thought never come back?—It kept on coming back, but I put it from me.

You thought you were a wicked-minded woman?—Yes; I thought the suspicion was, after all, an unworthy one.

When did the suspicion return?—On the day when I heard that Mr. Comebllack had been served with the writ. It all came back with a rush.

Did Jones ever come back to the hotel?—My word, yes; every day, up to the day the writ came in.

You might even be able to remember the very drinks the men had?—Yes; I put down the whisky, brandy, and gin bottles.

Who had the gin?—Jones; he likes his drop of gin, does Jones; he never varies.

Have you never been suspicious before of any person who has come into the hotel?—Oh, yes; somehow I am of a suspicious nature.

When was the last occasion?—This day week. Two men came into the bar.

Do you see them in the court now?—Yes, you and your friend (indicating Mr. Shand, K.C.). I recognise you now.

What did we drink?—You had a stout, and your friend an O.T. and lemonade.

You say we aroused suspicion?—That you did. You walked into the front bar first, then into the saloon bar, and whispered something to one another. But you were the more suspicious-looking of the two. You quietly commenced to face first in one direction, to the door from the counter, then in another, as though measuring something. But when you had a drink in the end I thought that after all you only had cold feet.

You have a good memory, indeed; what is the date to-day?—June 29.

Have another try?—June 24.

Try again?—June 27.

Did you catch a glance at the calendar near his Honor?—Truthfully, I can say I did not; the water bottle is in the way.

Mr. Gannon (re-examining): The suspicion you formed of Jones and his companions on that Thursday has been confirmed to-day?

Mr. Shand objected, and his Honor upheld the objection.

This concluded the evidence for the defence, and Mr. Shand recalled Jones and Webb in rebuttal.

During the luncheon adjournment a cablegram was received stating that Mr. Justice Ferguson's son had been killed at the front, and the further hearing of the suit was adjourned until Friday.

INDUSTRIAL COURT.

(Before Mr. Justice Heydon.)

PROFESSIONAL OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION.

The hearing of the application by the Professional Officers' Association for the constitution of a board for architects, etc., was continued. Mr. T. S. Crawford (who was instructed by Mr. W. Arnott) referred to the spread of industrial arbitration, until it provided for not only the humblest worker, but the skilled artisan and those engaged in intellectual occupations, such as shipmasters, trained nurses, etc. The class of men who were now seeking a board were, he claimed, in greater need of assistance than were the skilled manual workers, who were able to take a united and strong stand and to make their own bargains with employers.

His Honor said the present was a most important case, raising for the first time a question that somehow or other had never cropped up in the same way before. The question involved a consideration of what classes the Act was intended to apply to. It seemed ridiculous to suppose that every person who was employed by any other person should be included under its provisions, for if such a definition were given managers of insurance companies—who in some instances were receiving as high a salary as £3000 a year—could form themselves into a union and apply to the Court for a board. It at once raised the question as to where the line should be drawn.

In adjourning the hearing his Honor said he might not be able to hear further argument on the matter until after the vacation.

(Before Mr. Justice Edmunds.)

Mr. Wm. Geo. Kilgour, 70 Ormond-street, Paddington, and Mr. Phillip James Bailey, 260 King-street, Newtown, were nominated as employees' representatives on the Professional and Shopworkers' Group, No. 5 (Pharmacists) Board.

CARTERS AWARD.

The Colonial Sugar Refining Co., Ltd., appealed against the Transport Group, No. 14 (Carters, Cumberland) Board's award. Mr. Upton appeared for the appellant company; and Mr. M. J. Connington for the Trolly and Draymen's Union. Hearing was concluded and judgment reserved.

COURT OF MARINE INQUIRY.

(Before Judge Murray and Captains C. W. Davidson and W. C. McGilliam, assessors.)

LOSS OF THE KETCH PREMIER.

Mr. H. E. Moore, of the Crown Law Department, appeared for the Superintendent of Navigation; Mr. P. H. Sullivan (Messrs. Sullivan Bros.) for the master and owners of the ketch Premier; and Mr. Pickburn, instructed by Mr. G. S. Dunhill, for the tug Kiola. This was an inquiry into the loss of the ketch Premier, at Nambucca on May 24 last. The ketch, it appeared, left Newcastle on May 22, and arrived off Nambucca on the morning of the 24th. She signalled for a tug, and anchored until about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, shortly before high water, when the tug Kiola went out to her, and took her in tow. Passing the bar at the entrance to the harbour the tug, apparently through bumping upon it, lost way, and the towline became slack. The ketch lost steering way, went to leeward, and the tug cut the towline, went over the bar, and did not return until next morning. In the meantime the Premier grounded on Wellington rock, but afterwards slipped off, and finally sank in a gutter between another rock and the mainland, north of the entrance. No lives were lost.

The Court found that the wreck was caused by the fact that the Kiola, by reason of the recent shallowing of the entrance to the Nambucca River unknown to and undiscoverable by the master, took the ground near the outer end of the training wall, and remained fast so long that the tow rope connecting the two vessels became slack and ineffective to keep the Premier on her course. The Premier being a very shallow vessel drifted under the influence of the southerly breeze and swell on to the Wellington rock, and then, slipping past it into a bight in the mainland, was driven ashore, and became a wreck. The masters of both vessels did all that was reasonably possible to avoid the wreck, which in the circumstances was impossible. Owing to the narrowness and want of depth of the mouth of the Nambucca, and the fact that the deepest part of the channel runs close along through the toe of the training wall, which is constructed of loose masses of stone, the Court was of opinion that a single-screw steamboat is for several reasons a very inappropriate and dangerous form of tug for use in such a locality.

DISTRICT COURT.

(Before Judge Murray.)

CUSH v UNITED WIRE AND NAIL CO.

His Honor gave his reserved judgment in favour of the defendant company.

(Before Judge Scholes.)

LASSETTER AND CO. v FALLON.

This part-heard case, which was reported on Saturday, was concluded. His Honor found a verdict for the plaintiff for £85.

STAINES v LEVY.

Helen Staines, of Arden-street, Coogee, sued Solomon L. Levy, of Wellington, storekeeper. The plaintiff's claim stated (1) that the defendant detained a number of pictures, ornaments, etc.; (2) that the defendant converted to his own use these articles. On each of these counts £100 alternatively was claimed. A third count was that, although plaintiff had complied with an agreement about certain goods with the defendant, the latter did not re-deliver the goods to plaintiff. Under the last count £200 was claimed. Mr. E. A. Barton-instructed by Mr. E. O. Prosser, appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. D. Levy for the defendant. A verdict of £9/9/9 was found for the plaintiff.

MOTOR ACCIDENT.

Mrs. Eadith Annie Carmichael, of May-street, Merrylands, sued Lynwood John Bennett, of Willeroo-street, Lakemba, for damages caused to her by defendant's motor car. £30 was claimed. The plaintiff stated that she and others were going to a theatre on May 1 when, stepping off the footpath in Pitt-street, near Market-street, she was struck on the right arm by the car and injured. The defence was a denial of negligence in the matter. Mr. Sidney J. Bull appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. W. W. Monahan, instructed by Messrs. Robberds, England, and Vickery, for the defendant. The case is part heard.

For Lung and Throat Troubles,

LANE'S EMULSION

Read Mr. Ford's striking testimony:

"Some months ago I was troubled with a continuous cough—at times hard and irritating, especially towards the evening, and when rising in the morning, and for a few hours after—combined with phlegm.

"My doctor told me, after an examination of my lungs and mucus, that I 'should be careful,' as there were indications of consumption. The medicine prescribed did not entirely rid me of my trouble, although it certainly relieved me for the time being. Remembering that a relative of mine had derived great benefit from Lane's Emulsion, I decided to try it. Before I had finished one bottle the evening coughing had entirely disappeared, and after a few bottles so did the morning coughing. I continued taking the Emulsion, and feel to-day, long after discontinuing it, as well and vigorous as I felt in my youth. I have been passed as a 'first-class life' by two insurance societies, and my doctor has told me that my lungs are completely healed. You can make what use you like of this letter, as I believe such a potent remedy deserves great support.

"HARRY J. FORD, Tasman-st., Bondi, N.S.W."

Splendid for nerve troubles, weakness, wasting diseases, and incipient consumption.

Everything claimed for Lane's Emulsion is backed up by the testimony of hundreds of grateful men and women.

Lane's Emulsion acts quickly, beneficially, and does permanent good—supplying the elements necessary for the renewal of health, strength, and sound nerves; aids assimilation, increases flesh, and brings brightness and bloom to the checks.

Get a bottle of Lane's. Refuse substitutes. Sold by all chemists and stores at 2/6 and 4/6 per bottle. The large size is the most economical, as it contains more than two of the small bottles. If you have any trouble in getting it write direct to E. G. LANE, Box 884, G.P.O., Sydney, who will see that you are supplied.

In any case write NOW for a highly valuable booklet, which gives vital information concerning out-of-door living, the care of consumptives, and how generally to keep in health.

Lane's Emulsion is manufactured by E. G. LANE, Oamaru, N.Z., a graduate chemist.

A STOCK DISEASE.

TREFOIL DERMATITIS.

For many years a condition known as aphis disease has affected stock in certain parts of the State. The results of special experiments regarding same, carried out by Dr. Dodd, D.V.Sc., F.R.C.V.S., lecturer in veterinary pathology and bacteriology at Sydney University, have been published in pamphlet form, and are of interest to stock-owners. Although practically all stock-owners are convinced that the cause of the disease is the aphis, Dr. Dodd finds such is not the case, but that the disease is due to feeding mainly or exclusively upon the common trefoil (Medicago denticulata), and terms the trouble Trefoil dermatitis. He points out that the known geographical distribution of the disease extends to roughly about 250 square miles, and it is highly probable that the area over which it occurs is much larger. Dr. Dodd states:—

The disease consists in a more or less severe inflammation of certain parts of the skin, accompanied by exudation and irritation. Occasionally, necrosis of the tips of the ears may be seen. Frequently the affected part becomes covered with crusts or scabs of dried exudate and blood, or, on account of the animal biting or scratching the part, the skin may be removed and large superficial wounds appear. The mortality is practically nil, 'ut the economic loss in various ways is considerable.

The disease is observed principally in the spring, viz., during the months of August, September, and October. Very frequently at this period large numbers of sheep are affected after shearing, mainly in the region of the back. The ears and noses of sheep are also the seat of lesions, chiefly during the spring, but apparently also at other times of the year. In the latter case it is mostly young sheep that are affected. The symptoms in sheep are that soon after being shorn the skin along the back becomes swollen. An exudate then appears upon this part, and it may dry up in the form of crusts or scabs. There is intense itching of the affected area, and the animal bites, rubs, or scratches it, with the result that considerable areas may be rendered quite raw. When the ears or noses are affected the parts are swollen, with an accompanying exudation of a clear, yellow, sticky fluid (plasma), which often forms thick crusts. These may be mixed with dried blood as the result of scratching or rubbing the affected parts. If the exudation on the ears is scanty, then a marked desquamation of the skin in that region is often seen. In young sheep dry necrosis of the tips of the ears is not uncommonly met with. Suppuration and ulceration of eroded areas may occur and at times be serious; but these must be viewed as complications. In horses and cattle the condition is seen in those possessing white or pink skin, i.e., unpigmented skin, and it affects those areas only, pigmented skin remaining quite unaffected. In sheep, also it is the unpigmented skin that is attacked.

The condition is called aphis disease by stockowners, because they firmly hold the opinion that it is caused by aphides, which are very prevalent in those localities in the springtime. It has been observed that the disease in sheep is mainly coincident with the shearing season. It also occurs when trefoil is green and abundant. This latter, however, they consider has no connection with the disease except that the plant is a favourite haunt of aphides.

Some interesting extracts from reports by stock inspectors in various districts are given, and reference is made also to other scientific investigation, upon which apparently no definite opinion was formed. Last year Dr. Dodd was invited by the chief inspector of stock to investigate the so-called aphis disease, and accordingly visited the district of Narrabri and made some investigations. It is interesting to note that on his arrival he found that the disease had practically disappeared for the season. Dr. Dodd writes:—"It was the consensus of opinion among stock owners that the disease had been very mild that season, because, they said 'the aphis were scarce this year.' I also ascertained that, although the spring had started well and the growth of herbage was promising, the latter had rapidly dried up on account of want of rain." Some useful information was obtained in the district, however, and as a result, Dr. Dodd decided to conduct, in the first place, experiments with the common trefoil. The experiments were divided into three series—(1) Feeding guinea pigs upon trefoil, and, at the same time, exposing them to the direct rays of the sun; (2) feeding guinea pigs upon trefoil, but protecting them from the direct rays of the sun; (3) exposing guinea pigs to the direct rays of the sun, but feeding them upon their ordinary diet, containing no trefoil. Dr. Dodd found, as stated, "the condition produced in guinea pigs by feeding them upon trefoil is in all respects similar to the disease affecting sheep, horses, and cattle in certain districts, and popularly known as aphis disease. This disease is not due to aphides, but to feeding mainly or exclusively upon the common trefoil (Medicago denticulata)." He adds in his general conclusions:—

The factors necessary before the condition can set in appear to be the following:—

1. The food must consist entirely or mainly of trefoil.
2. The animal must possess unpigmented skin.
3. Such unpigmented skin must be exposed to the direct action of the sun's rays.

So far as the food is concerned, trefoil (Medicago denticulata) is a common plant in New South Wales, and is commonly eaten by stock, but not in large quantity, except in those localities where this special form of dermatitis occurs. It is apparent that the ingestion of small amounts of trefoil has no injurious effects. The exciting agent is, as shown by the experiments, eliminated fairly rapidly from the system. In the Narrabri district it was generally admitted by stockowners that the more trefoil present the worse was the disease. With regard to the particular kind of skin affected, the experiments corroborate what has been observed in the field, viz., that only those parts in which the skin is unpigmented are affected. Furthermore, the areas involved are those always exposed to the direct rays of the sun—nose, ears, back, etc. In sheep the condition as it affects the back is only observed after the wool has been removed by shearing. It is therefore evident that the thick covering of wool acts as an efficient protection to the unpigmented skin underneath. As regards the nose and ears of sheep, it has been shown that these parts are affected independently of shearing. This is to be expected, as they have no thick covering of wool. It is, however, quite probable that even lesions in these areas are most common in spring, for reasons already advanced. It is also possible that at other times of the year either the active agent disappears with the drying up of the plant, or that the dried trefoil then usually only forms a moderate proportion of the animals' diet.

CROWS.

At a meeting of the Kiama Pastures Protection Board, Mr. Graham reminded the board of the approach of the lambing season, when the crows would become troublesome. He and a neighbour had entered into an arrangement to offer a bonus of a shilling per head for crows. He mentioned the matter, thinking it might induce other sheep breeders to declare war on the same lines against crows.

WOODINESS IN PASSIONFRUIT.

F. E. S., Peakhurst, writes:—Most complaints as to woodiness in passionfruit come from the County of Cumberland. Every vine in a diseased district may suffer, but some may escape; single vines in a vineyard may also suffer and yet their neighbours will escape. Woody passionfruit has an unhealthy outward appearance. The colour of the leaves and vines becomes a light yellow-green instead of dark green. The leaves also become undersized and distorted, and branches also become crooked. The fruit falls long before maturity generally, but what does hang on has an absence of edible pulp and the rind becomes woody. If it is cut open when half grown they will be found to be thickly walled and nearly empty. The seeds are not properly fertilised or are not fertilised at all, and the space is filled with air and has failed to keep pace with the rest of the fruit. Some fruits on a diseased vine may contain a little pulp, but they have a flat taste and are very light in weight. The causes are various. The diseases may be attributed to—(1) exposed positions; (2) heavy frosts, cold and poor soils and subsoils; (3) improper fertilisers, or neglect to apply any at all; (4) insufficient moisture through dry summers. The time when the vine has most fruit and when woodiness is first discovered is during the first four years of its lifetime; the older the plants the more susceptible they are to disease. As to remedies, pruning should not be neglected, as an unpruned vine shows a lot of dead wood susceptible to the attacks of the disease, which is contagious. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture at summer strength just before each of the main crops and another as soon as the crop is fairly well set is recommended.

SEASON IN RIVERINA.

MUSHROOMS IN MID-WINTER.

WAGGA.—Remarkable weather conditions have been experienced in Riverina this month. Up to Monday rain has fallen on 16 days, and the total registered has ranged from upwards of 400 points at Wagga to 550 in other parts of the district. Rain again set in on Saturday, and still continues. The whole country has received the greatest soaking it has had for many years, and a good deal of low-lying land is under water. The appearance of the country is more like that of advanced spring than mid-winter, there having been a continuous growth of grass since the beginning of the month. The growing conditions have been so abnormal that there has been an abundance of mushrooms for the past four weeks—a mid-winter experience that is extremely rare in this part of Riverina. Stock are mostly in good condition, and a very satisfactory lambing is reported from all parts of the district. Some of the graziers are marking from 80 to 95 per cent. of lambs.

WIRE NETTING ARREARS.

MINISTER AND P. P. BOARDS.

WAGGA.—The aspersions cast upon the Wagga P. P. Board by the Minister for Lands have aroused considerable feeling in the district, and are strongly resented by the officials and the directors of the board. Locally this attempt by the Minister to place the responsibility for harassing farmers in seriously straitened circumstances upon the shoulders of the Wagga Board is regarded as extremely disingenuous, to say the least of it, since it is held that the correspondence in the possession of the board indicates, beyond question, that the whole responsibility for any pressure put upon the farmers, or any action taken against those in arrears with their payments on the wire-netting account, rests with the Department of Lands. The documentary evidence held by the board shows that the Minister's statement is not only unwarranted, but that it entirely misrepresents the case.

DISTRICT ITEMS.

BALLINA.—At a meeting of dairymen on Thursday a branch of the Primary Producers' Union was formed, with the following officers: —President, Mr. S. H. Lee; vice-presidents, Messrs. J. H. Meaney and F. S. Gibson; treasurer, Mr. C. R. Lovegrove; secretary, Mr. A. E. Biggs. The president and secretary were appointed delegates to the district council.

CAMPBELLTOWN.—The cold weather of the past few days will to some extent spoil the good effects that the splendid rainfall of last week accomplished. Considering the dry spell that the district experienced for the past 12 months cattle look particularly well, although farmers have had to have recourse to hand-feeding to a very considerable extent.

MOLONG.—The heavy rains of the last three weeks were augmented by further soaking falls on Sunday and Monday, 72 points additional being registered, making a total for the month of 738 points, which is a record for June extending over 31 years. The ground right throughout the district has received a splendid soaking, low-lying lands being submerged, and the hills exuding water, which has not been known for 20 years. The agricultural outlook in consequence is exceptionally bright, and a record harvest should be experienced. Early-sown crops are well above ground, and comparatively recent-sown crops are already making their appearance. Stock prospects are also excellent, feed being everywhere in profusion. If frosts are not too severe, there is enough feed to last till spring.

SUNNY CORNER.—Very heavy snow set in on Wednesday night, and continued without intermission for 24 hours. There will be a big loss in poor stock. Fortunately several stockowners removed their stock to the Forbes district last week. Since the beginning of this month over 8 inches of rain have fallen.

AUSTRALIAN PRODUCE ABROAD.

EVAPORATED FRUIT.

LONDON, May 18.

Evaporated fruits mixed for salads, or kept distinctive to their sorts, are coming into more general use. There is fear that there will be difficulty here in marketing the fruit harvest as baskets cannot be brought from Holland. This will cause people to turn more than ever to dried fruits.

RABBITS.

Only moderate supplies of frozen rabbits have been available of late, and though the demand is rather quiet prices have been well maintained. Sydney, blue, large, have been bringing 24/, 25/, and even 27/ per case of 24, young up to 23/, and small up to 16/ per case. The "Times" quotes Sydney large reaching 25/ at the Central Markets, but that cannot be taken as a general quotation. Sydney blue, large, on the way are quoted 24/ c.i.f.

TALLOW.

With a quiet market supply was good at last week's tallow auctions; there was little or no demand, and only 200 casks sold. The lower sorts declined /6 per cwt, but good descriptions showed no quotable change. Business since has been very restricted, sellers offering very sparingly owing to the extreme rates ruling. Under these circumstances no auctions may be held next week. At yesterday's auctions 1147 casks were offered and only 157 sold, with sellers accepting a decline of /3 to /6. The following are closing quotations for Australasian sorts:—Mutton, fine 53/, fair to good 50/ to 51/, dark to dull 47/ to 49/, hard 51/; beef, sweet 52/6, fine 51/, fair to good 47/6 to 48/6, dark to dull 45/ to 46/6.

HIDES, LEATHER, ETC.

At the last public sales of hides and skins there was little or no demand in the Australasian section. Only 145 salted ox and cow hides, out of 2549 offered, sold, averaging 29½ to 52½lb, 10½d per lb. Of 1226 dry-salted ox and cow hides and skins offered 23 sold, brined, averaging 20½lb, /11¼ per lb. 1792 salted and 794 dry-salted yearlings, 654 buffalo hides, and 3636 salted sheep pelts offered, none sold. At the Australasian leather sales 31 bales offered, none sold. Basils were not in supply at the auctions, but private sales have been reported of a few Sydney mixed at .8 to /85½ per lb.

COPRA.

The copra market continues steady. South Sea is quoted, March-May value, £32/5/ c.i.f., London.

MEAT.

With shortness of supplies at Smithfield the demand has been weak, due probably in a measure to high prices, and possibly also to the "meatless days" campaign. In beef States chilled hides are 7/4 to 7/8, fores 5/11 to 7/11, frozen hides 6/10 to 7/; Plate chilled hinds are 7/2 to 7/6, fores 5/8 to 5/10; Plate frozen fores 5/8; Uruguayan chilled hinds 6/10 to 7/, fores 5/6 to 5/8; Australian and New Zealand nominal; South African fores, frozen, 5/, chilled cow hinds 6/10 to 7/1, fores 5/8 to 5/9, frozen cow hinds 6/8 to 6/8. Mutton, New Zealand, 5/11 to 6/11, ewes 5/8 to 5/10, Australian 5/18 to 5/10, Plate 6/6 to 6/8. Lamb, New Zealand, 6/6 to 6/8, Australian 6/6 to 6/8, Argentine 7/6 to 7/10.

The quotations for meat in the London Central Markets last week were the highest on record, sides of beef making /11¼ per lb, sheep to 1/0¾, lamb 1/3, veal 1/1, and pork /11. Chilled hindquarters were fetching 1/ per lb. Plate lambs last Friday made as much as 1/ a lb, while Canterbury lambs were selling at /91 per lb. On Tuesday frozen New Zealand bull beef made up to 5/6 to 6/4 for hinds, and 5/ to 5/4 fores.

CHEESE.

The cheese market is extremely awkward, and with the Government still taking the bulk of the arrivals there is not enough left for general requirements. It is impossible to keep prices steady as long as these conditions last. Canadian is in almost negligible quantity, and is offered at 114/ to 115/ per cwt., whilst New Zealand is of free sale at from 113/ to 114/. Sellers are now asking 115/ up to as high as 116/ for the next arrival on the Tongariro, although at the moment one cannot hear of these prices being accepted. A fair business has been passing over the cables for new fodder make of Canadian cheese. The nearest quotations heard of are from 103/ to 10/6 c.i.f. British ports, whilst a certain amount of speculative business has been indulged in by some Canadian shippers at from 92/ to 98/ c.i.f. London, for June made cheese, for July and August shipment. Prospects in Canada appear to be for a considerably increased make as compared with last year, and the pastures are reported to be in magnificent condition. The Government are reported to have started buying cheese in Canada. But should they withdraw there will be a serious decline in values.

FRUIT EXPORT TRADE.

LONDON, May 18.

Last week the apple market was weaker. Victorian Jonathans brought 8/6 to 9/6, Five Crown Pippins 8/9 to 9/, Munroe's Favourites 8/ to 10/, Reinnette 8/, London Pippins 9/3 to 10/, Adam's Pearmain 9/3. Tasmanian Ribstons 8/ to 9/, Cleopatra or New York Pippins 9/ to 10/6, Scarlet Nonpariel or Scarlet Pearmains 8/6 to 9/, Alexandra 7/ to 8/, Duke of Clarence 6/6 to 8/, Five Crown Pippins 8/, Adams' Pearmains 8/, Sturmer Pippins 9/6 to 10/6, French Crabs 9/ to 10/, King Pippins 8/6 to 9/. This week the figures are better, but the trade has been rather hard hit this year in that heavy shipments have arrived almost simultaneously. For instance, yesterday three consignments of Western Australian fruit were on sale, the Wiltshire, Shropshire, and Ulysses having all arrived at once. These vessels also carried shipments from Tasmania and Victoria. This, of course, affected prices. For Dunns and Jonathans the prices are now running at from 9/ to 11/ per case, the former having a slight preference. This is below the usual average, and is principally due to so much arriving at one time. A large proportion of West End buyers has also been lost owing to the war. But taking things all round, the trade has done remarkably well. The fruit arriving generally is in better condition than last year, but it is open to improvement yet in the matter of packing and carrying on the steamers. Western Australian grapes keep up prices pretty well. Black Malagas fetch 28/ to 30/ per case. The market is not over-burdened. Other sorts in small quantities are fetching about 15/6 to 16/6 for Almerias, and 13/ for Purple Cornichons.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

On Saturday afternoon last the students from the agricultural classes at the Granville and Sydney technical colleges, accompanied by their instructor, visited Mr. Taylor's vineyard at Aurora, Lidcombe, for a practical lesson in the pruning of grape vines. The instructor, Mr. Henry Lord, also explained the winter treatment of the grape vine against insect and fungi pests.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1916.

AUSTRIA AND GERMANY.

The next few weeks are bound to impose an extreme test on the resources of the German army and on the strategy of its leaders. It is clear that on the Western front the equipment and the training of the British army are at last far enough advanced to satisfy expert and responsible critics, while on the East the advance of the Russians has proved sufficiently threatening to attract reinforcements from the armies opposed to them. Whatever deductions we may make from the cabled estimates of the number of troops sent to Kovel and of the Emperor's determination to hold it, there can be no doubt that these movements have considerably disorganised the German plans. The British, who hold inferior positions, will at least find themselves less exposed to attack even if they are not able, like the Italian army, to undertake an offensive themselves. The test of this strategy will, of course, be made only when the German lines are compelled to resist an attack on a wide front by a force sufficiently powerful to compel them to send reinforcements to the scene of the advance as they did at the battles of Loos and the Champagne, and as the Allies did at Ypres and Verdun. The defence of Kovel, however, teaches us one lesson which cannot be altered by the result of the battles there or elsewhere. It is clear that the Austrians are no better fitted to stand by themselves to-day than they were in August, 1914. The first Russian advance into Galicia was a remarkable comment on the argument employed for some time by the German Chancellor that the Austrian Government had persisted in going to war in spite of his moderating influence. It showed that all the preparations as well as all the energy and a great part of the ability at the disposal of the Central Powers had been contributed by Germany. Later events have confirmed the lesson learned in the first few weeks. The Austrian troops have fought with great bravery. Their artillery has been of service to Germany on almost every battlefield. The Dual Monarchy has shown an unexpected sense of unity, and the power of resistance displayed in the Italian campaign has disappointed all expectation. But in leadership, in financial strength, in the quality of the troops engaged, and in the equipment the Germans have shown themselves so far superior to their allies that their help was needed in any serious enterprise or in any moment of danger. That help has always been sent is not attributable to a sense of obligation to an ally or of responsibility for a misguided pupil. Germany has two reasons for sending help which are founded entirely on self interest. From Bismarck to the author of the "Hymn of Hate" every representative German has admitted that the junction of the two Empires is the most vulnerable spot on the German frontier. It is many miles from Kovel to the borders of Silesia; but the Germans are now carrying out a fixed principle of their strategy in defending their territory at the furthest point with which they can maintain a satisfactory line of communications. The second basis of their conduct relates, not to the management of the war, but to their plans for the future. The German Government has no intention of allowing the financial and military organisation by which it controls Austria at present to be relaxed when the war is over. Either victory or defeat will be used to complete the process of subordination which was begun in 1866, and was carried a step nearer its present goal when Austria was successfully protected against Russia seven years ago by the appearance of the Emperor in "shining armour." The Allies at the recent Paris Conference treated the economic union of the Central Powers as an accomplished fact. German writers, with the support of the Chancellor, assume that the union will have a common military organisation and a common foreign policy. Even if the Germans were too discreet to admit it, we could assume that any economic union in which their country was a partner would have military and political aims, and would be guided by the influence which first decreed the present war and then sustained the national confidence in victory.

The necessary attributes of such a union may be gathered from the speeches of the Chancellor and from his sketch of the terms of peace. It must be invulnerable itself, and well fitted for aggression in case of need. The Chancellor has constantly set his desire for guarantees against the claims of his opponents for annexation. Poland, Courland, and Volhynia are to be detached from Russia, and given some form of government at present undefined. Belgium is to be restored to its citizens, but with a constitution remodelled to meet the wishes of its conquerors. If the Empire must be protected against attacks from without, its constituent parts must, of course, remain in their present integrity. The zeal for the independence of small nations, which the Chancellor described in his address to a Bulgarian deputation as one of the principles of the German mind, will not be practised in the mid-European Empire. The dominant race will be the Germans, and their subjects will include Hungarians, Italians, and Slavs, together with the Turks and Bulgarians, as soon as their experience of the status of vassals has deprived them of a traditional love of independence. Their dream of a middle Europe has no place for a Russian invasion of Transylvania or for a Roumanian nation, which, after successfully intervening in the war, would become the dominant power in the Balkans. It has been planned as an organisation which would enable the Germans to make the best use of victory and to suffer least by defeat. But obviously it cannot be achieved in its completeness except as the result of a great victory. If the Germans are to reduce such a people as the Hungarians to a permanently inferior status they must show that the German gospel of force is justified by their own test of success. If the Central Empires are to have a path to the East uninterrupted by any vestige of opposition the extinction of Servia must be recognised, and that can only be permitted when the Allies are defeated and the influence of Russia is finally at an end.

THE SHIPPING DEAL.

One of the principal things Mr. Hughes went to England to arrange was the transport of our latest and greatest wheat harvest. We have waited week after week, while the Prime Minister has been electrifying the people of the Mother Country by his speech-making, for word of something done; and in the meantime the bulk of our wheat has remained in sheds or has begun to sprout in unprotected mammoth stacks, where adequate covering or sheds are absent in country railway yards. Hardly an impression has been made upon this valuable asset, in the way of converting it to the use of the Allies, since Mr. Hughes reached his destination more than three months ago. And now comes word that he has bought a fleet of fifteen steamers of 4000 tons each—making a total of 60,000 tons, but still inadequate for the work to be done. A reply may be offered, perhaps, that it will be easy to add to the number. Is it not the beginning of a Commonwealth fleet of freight steamers? This undoubtedly must be taken seriously, for it is a plank in the Labour platform that the State is to become shipowner on a large scale as well as supreme master of everything that the Government may consider or declare to be a monopoly. Such a development in war time, however, when experiments of any kind at the expense of the public should be avoided, hardly needs specific condemnation here. It is bad in principle to swap horses when crossing a stream; and suddenly to enter into a business like ship owning, with the certainty of antagonising existing interests and introducing an incalculable factor into public finance, is worthy of wild cat politics, not of the statesmanship with which Mr. Hughes has been so effusively credited by his admirers throughout Great Britain. Apparently the way has been cleared in preparation for this move, judging by the promptitude with which it has been made at last; and the announcement comes, therefore, as the end of a business in which the appointment of a manager at £2000 per annum is a detail.

The Prime Minister's explanation, no doubt, will lay special emphasis upon the difficulties created by the destruction of vessels during the last six months by enemy submarines, mines, and in action. Lord Beresford, in his speech in the House of Lords at the beginning of May last, gave certain figures which Lord Curzon, who followed him, did not controvert. He said that we started the war with 11,553 vessels of over 400 tons, and that our losses from the aforementioned causes were 800. Admiralty requirements, including transports, were between two and three thousand, he said; and that left 8853 vessels to do three times the work of the original number. On this basis he declared that the losses incurred represented not 5 per cent. of the total, but 14 per cent., for the ratio must be based upon the available vessels and not upon the number just before war began. Lord Curzon's reply was, undoubtedly, a reasonable one in its optimism; and he announced as a strange coincidence that the number of merchant ships lost through the war almost exactly balanced the new ships added to the merchant service during the war. Still after the best had been said the position was declared by the "Nation" to be unsatisfactory, in that "the new tonnage laid down does not cover the casualties in any recent fortnight." Things have improved during the last six weeks for the German submarine campaign seems to have been countered if not broken; but there is quite enough material for Mr. Hughes to use when he begins to explain. Nevertheless we fail to see that his latest move will help us very much. A new wheat harvest may be said to be in sight with recent rains, and if the Commonwealth freight fleet is to do any good it will have to be largely supplemented. Whatever the Federal Government may hope and think it will find itself directly with several intricate problems before it instead of one simple question in creating a new instrument to do emergency work. The Prime Minister talks of a profit to be made, but New South Wales knows how much profit there is in State enterprises with State employees on top. Australia is being saddled with what promises to be a very heavy additional burden, and the war is not yet won.

A COALING BATTALION.

There is nothing but good to be said of the agreement reached between the Minister for the Navy, Mr. Jensen, and the Sydney Coal Lumpers' Union about the coaling of transports and cargo ships in this port. A coaling battalion is to be constituted, and strikes are specially ruled out. The members of the battalion—actually the union itself—become organised for war and have in effect endorsed the call for universal service. They have agreed with the Minister to do certain vital work for the Commonwealth Naval Department; and they have not been compelled by him, or by anybody else, to stand by the flag under any conditions. They are volunteers and not pressed men. This is, of course, true; and no one need cavil if they continue to insist that they have simply enlisted for home service. But logically the Sydney Coal Lumpers' Union has declared for universal service. Its members have announced in almost so many words that the war governs everything and must come first. If this be accepted as an essential fact we cannot see how unionists generally are to evade a manifest duty, unless they repudiate the coal lumpers' agreement not to strike when at work on transports or cargo ships, and also the conclusion to be drawn from it. The duty cheerfully shouldered by the Sydney coal lumpers involves discipline. They are not going to find it easy to surrender the easy ways which so surely lead to strikes; and presumably the one sacrifice will lead to another in making sure that there shall be no unnecessary loss of time in doing the work agreed upon. But the principle once accepted must govern everything, and should appeal to all unions. The strike in war time inevitably hampers production or trade and injures the State where it should be strengthened. Our resources can never be fully mobilised unless every class in the community and all the available units are consciously doing something to help in carrying on the war. Universal service is this and nothing more. Those who are anxious to be up and doing, and only ask to be shown what they best can do, will fear nothing when the Federal Government finds it necessary to extend the Sydney coal lumpers' agreement by Act of Parliament so as to make the good example fully fruitful; and compulsory service when it comes will simply be the community's determination to fight Germany to the bitter end. In Great Britain this readiness to mobilise the nation's resources has given a magnificent army, an unrivalled organisation for munition work, and a better understanding between all sections of the people. There is still room for improvement in Britain, and the good work goes on. Here a capital beginning has been made; and if unionists everywhere would follow the coal lumpers' lead the troubles of the Federal Government would be practically at an end. It would be easy then to lay hands upon slackers and shirkers wherever they might try to hide.

WAR CHEST BUTTON DAY.

MESSAGES FROM AUSTRALIAN GENERALS.

The day after to-morrow is War Chest Button Day, and every indication points to success. So far over a quarter of a million buttons have been ordered, of which the country is getting 200,145 and the suburbs 50,000, while the gold buttons number 2031. The special subscriptions amount to £5571, further sums of £50 and over having been subscribed as follows:—Sir James Fairfax, £100; J. O. Fairfax, £100; G. E. Fairfax, £100; "Herald" and "Mail" Employees' Patriotic Fund, £100; A. R. Troup, £100; Gillespie Bros. and Co., £100; Farmer and Co., £50; Dr. Ralph Worrall, £50; Port Kembla War Fund (first instalment), £50; Lysaght's, Ltd., £50.

The amateur sportsmen of New South Wales, in conjunction with the New South Wales Sports Club, will take part in the collection on Friday. The area bounded by George, Hunter, Pitt, and Bridge streets has been allotted by the War Chest Committee, and stalls will be erected on each corner. The main stall, which will be stocked with home-made jams and cakes, will be at the corner of Hunter and George streets, and will be in charge of Mrs. Barry (lawn tennis), Mrs. Seldon (rowing), and Mrs. Hill (swimming).

The Australian Army Service Corps Comforts' Fund will conduct a tea-room in Barrack-street on War Chest Day, Mrs. H. Y. Braddon and others being in charge. Cafes Chantant are to be held at the Hotel Australia on Friday afternoon, and the Wentworth Hotel on Thursday night. The music at the Wentworth will begin at 8 p.m., and dancing and bridge will wind up the evening. Mrs. Maclurcan is arranging this entertainment for the fund.

The following message has been received by cable by the Secretary of the War Chest (Mr. C. A. le M. Walker) from Mr. Budden (War Chest Commissioner in Egypt):—"After 10 months' work with the troops, the value of the War Chest gifts is more apparent than ever. The opportunities for grand work among them are immense, but the need is—more funds and still more funds. The usefulness of the War Chest is only limited by the funds at its disposal. We appeal to the people of Australia, who have supported us so generously in the past, still further to assist with their gifts, which help so materially to lighten the burdens and maintain the health and spirits of the men, while the moral benefits cannot be overestimated.

"General Cox writes: 'I cannot speak too highly of the magnificent work of the War Chest and kindred organisations in Australia, which by their gifts have helped to save the lives of many men in Gallipoli and Egypt.'

"General Antill writes: 'At this particular period, in the intense heat of midsummer in the desert, when great difficulty exists in procuring extras outside ordinary rations, these gifts have been a great boon. Our people will be pleased to know that the health of our troops is excellent, and their discipline, cheeriness, and devotion to duty beyond praise.'

"General Ryrie writes: 'I feel sure I am only expressing the sentiments of the whole of my officers and men when I say we deeply appreciate the kindly thought of our good friends of the War Chest. We feel that those at home are doing their share, and in so doing they make our great task the lighter.'"

Mr. Budden's cablegram concludes:—"United best wishes from self and staff for the collection on the 30th."

"HERALD" AND "MAIL" EMPLOYEES.

At a meeting of the committee of the above fund yesterday afternoon, the sum of £100 was voted to the War Chest Button Day Fund, and in order that the whole of this sum might be used for the benefit of our soldiers it was decided not to ask for buttons in return.

CARGO PILLAGE.

NEWCASTLE FIRMS SUFFER.

NEWCASTLE, Tuesday.

A Newcastle importing firm states that the pillage of cargo is now worse than it has ever been. One firm to-day received five cases of goods, and discovered that four had been interfered with and goods stolen. Two of the cases showed no outward appearance of interference. The nails fastening the hoop-iron and battens to one side of the cases had been chiselled and broken, and the middle piece of the seal taken out. When the goods had been removed the piece was replaced, and fresh nails used to fasten the battens and hoopiron. The other two cases had been partly broken open with hooks. The zinc lining had been ripped with hooks, and the goods taken. This pilfering is causing great loss and inconvenience to firms.

FIREWOOD.

RECORD HIGH PRICES.

A truckload of the best quality firewood from Dungog was sold yesterday for 28s a ton.

This is the highest price ever paid for firewood in the Sydney market. Normally the best wood is obtainable wholesale at about 17s 6d.

During the past couple of months the arrivals of wood at the city saleyards have been steadily diminishing, and, as it is stated that the falling-off has been caused by the scarcity of labour, there is no immediate prospect of an increase in the supplies.

MILITARY MOTOR AMBULANCES.

The Australian Imperial Force headquarters have notified headquarters at Victoria Barracks that it is inadvisable to send more gift motor ambulances or service cars at present, it being preferable to accept money values that orders may be placed in Great Britain for cars of a standard type, where all parts are made to the one pattern.

CASE FOR COMPULSION.

LLOYD GEORGE'S SPEECH.

GREAT FIGHT FOR LIBERTY.

The case for compulsory service was stated in a strong speech by Mr. Lloyd George in the debate on the Military Service Bill in the House of Commons on May 4.

"This is not a secret session," he said, "and there are facts which are common to friend and foe. What are these facts? We have got Germany in possession of Belgium, Serbia, Montenegro, and important parts of France, Poland, and the Balkan provinces, and entrenched. It is a fundamental axiom of military science that in order to drive out an entrenched foe equally well organised, equally well led, equally well equipped, you must have a superiority in men. Is it not evident that the greater the superiority in men, the more assured the success? And when our military advisers come to us and say that in order to win the war we must summon immediately to the colours all the men who are available, he has only to look at the facts himself, and he will know why they have come to that conclusion.

THE IMPORTANCE OF EQUIPMENT.

"It is perfectly true, if you take the Allies as a whole, that they have got an overwhelming superiority in men. That is why I am confident in the issue, but that superiority in men must be a superiority in equipped men. It is no secret that last year the comparative failure of the Russian campaign was due to lack of equipment. It is no secret there has been a great improvement this year; but it is also true that the number of men Russia or any other country can put into the field is limited by equipment. Very well, it is then essential that until Russia can complete her equipment France and Britain, who can equip, should put every available man into the field until the moment arrives. (Cheers.) It is essential—the enemy knows the value of that, they know the importance of it, they know the danger of our not taking the utmost share that we possibly can of the burden this year and immediately, and I venture to say the powers we are taking to summon every available man to the colours will be about the worst piece of news the German General Staff can read. (Cheers.)

"EVERY AVAILABLE MAN."

"I have waited in vain for any argument against the bill. I thought there was some ground of principle, something which would override even military necessity. I have waited for this great overriding principle, and I have not heard it yet. Is the bill inconsistent with the principles of either Liberalism or Democracy? Is it inconsistent with the principles of democracy that the State should demand the services and help of every man to defend its life when it is at stake? There is not and never has been a country yet faced with a great military peril that has ever saved itself without resort to compulsion. Never. It is true of autocracies; it is even more true of democracies. Thank God Britain is not a paralytic that cannot command the services of every citizen. (Cheers.) Where is the principle? I have a personal interest in finding out, because I have been told that I am a traitor to Liberal principles because I supported conscription; therefore, I am personally interested in seeking it out. I cannot find it. Every great democracy which has been challenged, which has had its liberties menaced, has defended itself by resort to compulsion from Greece downwards. Washington won independence for America by compulsory measures; they defended it in 1812 by compulsory measures. Lincoln was not merely a great democrat, but his career was in itself the greatest triumph that democracy has ever achieved in the sphere of government. He proclaimed the principle of 'Government of the People, by the People, for the People,' and he kept it alive by conscription. In the French Revolution the French people defended their newly-obtained liberties against every effort of the Monarchists by compulsion and by conscriptionary levies. France is defending her country to-day by conscription. In Italy the Italian democracy are seeking to redeem their enthralled brethren by compulsion. In Serbia the Serbian peasants defended their mountains by compulsory measures, and they are going to win them back by the same means. When hon. members say that conscription is contrary to the principles of liberty and true democracy they are talking in defiance of the whole teaching of history and of common-sense.

A CONSERVATIVE ESTIMATE.

"I am told, 'Oh, you will only produce 200,000 men.' Personally I say at once that I think that 200,000 is far too conservative an estimate. But supposing it were true that you could only get 200,000 men, do people realise what 200,000 men means? It means 10 divisions of infantry. Have the objectors followed the course of this war? I cannot believe that they have thought it out. In the great battle of Ypres, where it was a question whether we should get through and outflank the Germans, or whether the Germans would get through and take Calais—and everybody knows how near that was—there is not a military man present who will not tell you that a single fresh division marched into action when the troops were tired and exhausted and could not fight would have meant victory on either side. If, after a great campaign lasting it may be weeks or it may be months, when the men are tired and exhausted and there are losses, you can get 200,000 fresh men to throw into action, who can tell what the effect would be?

THE FINANCIAL AND TRADE PROBLEM.

"I know all that is to be said about financing the Allies, about shipping and about the necessity for keeping up our trade. I can conceive contingencies when we would have to take greater risks. (Hear, hear.) They have not arisen, but they may arise. Let me give this one fact to the House of Commons. If we had summoned to the colours from the British Empire the same proportion of our population as France has called to the defence of her frontiers there would have been twice as many men as we have got. I am referring now to Great Britain, the United Kingdom, and the self-governing Dominions. I know the responsibilities of financing the Allies, and also that the difficulties with regard to transport have to be taken into account. If you make a generous allowance for that you still have a substantial margin before we have made the same sacrifice that France has made. When we talk about 200,000 men as if that were the last thing we could do in defending the British Empire it is ridiculous. I do not want the Germans to make any mistake. I want them to know that if there comes a time when it will make the difference between victory and defeat, between liberty and submission to the Prussian yoke, then this country will summon the whole of her manhood to the colours to defend itself. I think it is important that not only our Allies but our foes should know that when we talk about 200,000 men we are not at the end of the resources of this Empire. (Cheers.)

TRIBUTE TO THE WORKING CLASSES.

"There is one thing for which I have waited anxiously in this debate, and I am glad it has not appeared—namely, the suggestion that if we take the only means which are essential to the purpose of successfully conducting this war there will be trouble among the working classes. I never believed it. We were told before that there would be trouble, that there would be turbulence, and that there would be general strikes. There were none of these things. It is said—Oh! the leaders persuaded them not to do it. Why did they persuade them? Because they knew that a general strike would damage this country in the hour of its need, and they were too patriotic to encourage them. Are the working classes less patriotic than their leaders? Do you think they do not realise that just as well as their leaders? I object to and protest against this talk about the working classes as if they were not an essential part of our community, as if they were some doubtful neutrals of whom we have to be careful; otherwise at any moment they might be converted into formidable foes. (Laughter.) That is an insult to the working classes. (Cheers.) It is not in the least justified. There are differences between the classes. There are differences of training, differences of environment, differences in circumstances and conditions, but the fundamental passions and virtues own no class—(cheers)—and patriotism is one of the greatest of these. There has been no distinction in this war between one class and another in the readiness with which they have made sacrifices for their country. If you had gone down to the workmen of this country and said to them, 'Conscription is essential to victory for your country,' does anyone say that the workmen would have said, 'We won't have it; we will strike'? Not at all. It is their country, just as much as ours. They know this is a struggle for liberty; they have sacrificed more liberty than any class. They have won more by liberty than any class, they would lose more by the downfall of liberty than any class, and they know that Prussian domination would hurt them more than any other class in this country. They know more than that. They hope, as we all do, that this is the last frenzy of war before it expires. (Cheers.) There is no class that have a greater interest in peace than the working class. They know perfectly well that if the Prussian, through any means—neglect on our part, failure to put our resources in at the right moment, or any other—triumphs and becomes the lord of Europe, it will be but the beginning of war, for humanity could not endure long the yoke." (Cheers.)

WAR TIME IN LONDON

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Irish Rebels.

LONDON, May 11.

This is a week in which ghastly details of the Dublin rising are so thick about us that we have almost lost sight of the war. In some regards these details are no less than harrowing. In other regards they deal with the personalities of the men engaged in this bad business, our sorrow over which is the keener as we find that in so many cases they were men of intellectual worth. Leaving out of account those who had attained responsible positions in the Public Service—doubly traitors, in that they conspired against the Government from which they took their living—there were among the rebels scholars and lawyers and writers, both of prose and poetry. No doubt it would be found on investigation that the characteristic Irish attributes of emotionalism and imaginativeness were more powerful influences upon them than any more solid quality of reasonableness. For all that, it is sad to see gifts and graces of this calibre come to such base uses. The case of Mr. Skeffington-Sheehy, too, is deplorable witness to the anarchy which prevailed in Dublin a fortnight ago. Here was a gifted, if eccentric, journalist, said not only to have been of entirely pacific disposition, but to have been actually engaged, when he was arrested, in posting placards that called upon the rebels to cease their desperate work. In what confusion of circumstances he was shot is for the court-martial now engaged upon the matter to discover. But shot he was—a pitiable tragedy, and but one of many tragedies of the rebellion in which apparently innocent people were involved.

Married Volunteers.

The no longer avoidable compulsory service clauses of the recruiting bill now in debate have had the effect of sending many thousands of married men to enlist voluntarily. There has been, in fact, a rush of married men for attestation ever since the group system again became available. In many cases, no doubt, they will make appeal for exemption to the tribunals which now, by the way, are so choked with work that 20,000 claims are waiting to be heard in London alone. But the tribunals are exempting very few, and most of these married men will have to serve. Already crowds of them have been called, and all over London is going on, just now, a pathetic breaking-up of homes and a ruthless dislocation of home life and home ties. On the financial side, the married are guaranteed two pounds a week for the covering of liabilities for rent, interest on instalments, insurance, rates and taxes, and school fees. But there is a good deal more in this revolution than can be met by money compensation. Most of the tragedy of it is mercifully concealed in the homes themselves, and one sees both husbands and wives facing their trouble cheerfully. The spirit abroad is such, indeed, that men, and women too, have accepted this inevitable as part of the duty to be done, and without a word of complaint of it as domestic disaster. In which regard, perhaps, matters are helped by the fact that, as it is a universal inconvenience, there are many companions in misfortune.

Zeppelins and the Navy.

Our latest Zeppelin raid—that of a week ago—was a somewhat mysterious affair. Five or six, and perhaps more, airships appeared over the extreme northern coast above Aberdeen, and cruised thence to the English coast about Norfolk. Without attempting to force a way inland, they departed whence they came, and with no result save that concerning which we are wondering. It would seem that this was a scouting expedition, with a view to naval operations somewhere, somehow. The possibilities of the airship in naval warfare have yet to be discovered. It is probable that in such a visit as that of last week the German naval authorities were experimenting with a view to test the possible communications. Obviously, if a fleet of airship scouts can be set over our fleet of warship scouts the information value of their wireless will be great. Every movement of a naval squadron could be promptly signalled, and the corresponding movement of enemy ships adjusted. Especially useful, one would think, in the case of quick dashes across to our coasts, when the rush of the British ships to give battle to the invader could be anticipated by him in ample time for his familiar feat of running away. Other possibilities of the airship as scout are no less obvious.

Mr. Hughes and Labour.

Mr. Hughes continued his campaign in this country last night with a long and vigorous speech addressed to a crowded Labour meeting at Queen's Hall. In that capacity he becomes something of an inconvenience to the organs which have given him most of his publicity here. They are ardent Hughesites when Mr. Hughes volleys and thunders in behalf of the tariff reform they advocate, but they treat him merely with respect when, as last night, he varies his discussion of Empire problems by a discussion merely of Labour ideals. For not one of those organs has much sympathy with the Labour ideals of Mr. Hughes, or, indeed, with Labour's consummation in Australia of some of its projects. The matter becomes still more difficult, too, when Labour personages of this country repudiate Mr. Hughes, on the ground that he has trailed Labour in the mire by his war talk and his tariff reform talk. However, they must all fight it out themselves. The Northcliffe press still finds Mr. Hughes useful, and remains his humble servant. He continues to speak, and continues to get a good hearing, and his capacity to say the same thing in a variety of ways is just the asset he needed for this campaign. As to how his negotiations with the Government are proceeding in the matter of specific Australian problems doth not yet appear. The difficulties have probably been much greater than he anticipated.

Australians in France.

Australian soldiers come to London nowadays in small batches, and of quite different order from that of their former visit. They are on leave, no less, from the front. By this time they know more than they did of the German as a soldier, but at least they are unanimous in their appreciation of France as a change from Egypt and Gallipoli. They do not talk a great deal, these boys of ours, and it is probable that even now few of us understand what it means to them to be in a beautiful country, amongst a warm-hearted people, and with quite solid comforts to vary the danger of the trenches. And perhaps we do not understand that because we have never adequately gauged the hardships they endured in those other and so different fields of war. They will fight presently in France, and some of them will die there. We must be prepared for it as inevitable.

AUSTRALIAN NEWS.

DAILY BUDGET FOR THE TROOPS.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

The Federal Ministry has made arrangements with the Eastern Extension Company for the transmission of a daily budget of Australian news to the members of the A.I.F. in Egypt, England, and France.

The Minister for External Affairs (Mr. Mahon) stated to-day that arrangements had been made through the High Commissioner's office with several of the principal papers of Great Britain for the publication of this daily budget. Leaflets containing the news would also be distributed among the troops at the front. The Eastern Extension Company had offered to transmit the news at the reduced rate of 4½d a word without making any extra charge for copies taken off in Egypt for distribution there. Arrangements have been made for the various State Governments to furnish a budget of news concerning their respective States, from which the daily summary will be selected for cabling.

GOOD WORK IN WEST.

Rome is gaily bedecked in honour of the Italian success in the Trentino.

A Milan report says the Italians captured in a day positions which the Austrians were three months in conquering.

A Petrograd communique states that the Russians have approached the passes leading to Transylvania. A message received in Rome from Petrograd says that the Russians have penetrated the province of Transylvania.

General Sir Douglas Haig reports that the British on the Western front carried out a number of successful night raids, and penetrated the German lines at ten different places, inflicting heavy casualties.

The Munster Fusiliers and the Anzacs were particularly successful. There has been a good deal of artillery work on both sides.

A German night attack on the French positions west of Thiaumont (east of the Meuse) completely failed. The Germans claim that a French night-attack west of Mort Homme was unsuccessful.

REJOICING IN ROME.

LONDON, June 27.

The "Daily Telegraph's" correspondent at Milan says the Italians captured in a day positions which the Austrians were three months in conquering, comprising the entire Mandrielle roadway system, and the reconquering of the summit of Monte Cengio, thus giving the Italians command of the Arsiero Valley.

Motor transport played an important part in the success. All the roads were lined with lorries and cars of every description. The gigantic labour of transferring half a million men went on for weeks with clock-like regularity. Artillery was transported similarly, hundreds of guns being dragged up seemingly inaccessible mountain summits over improvised roads.

When the guns opened fire from their concealed positions the Austrian advance was broken in a single day, and the rout began. Under a hail of shells the only chance was instant retreat, otherwise the Austrians between Posina and Asiago would have been annihilated.

Hundreds of new big guns, which during the last two days were unmasked on the heights, opened a tremendous fire on both Austrian wings. How the guns were dragged up such heights along roads made in less than two weeks by thousands of workmen must be reckoned the most brilliant feat of Alpine warfare. As a result the Austrians unexpectedly saw their centre menaced. The Italians are attacking furiously, and already many prisoners have been taken.

A Rome message says that the city is gaily bedecked in honour of the victory. A great evening demonstration is being arranged.

OFFICIAL REPORT

A communique says: After an intense artillery preparation the infantry advanced from Vallarsa (a valley running south-east from Rovereto to the Italian border) to the Sette Comuni plateau, the enemy withdrawing rapidly in Vallarsa. We took Raossi (2½ miles from the Italian border) and the slopes south-west of Monte Menerie. The enemy blew up the bridge at Fixt, set fire to Aste, St. Anna, and Staineri. We drove in the enemy at the head of the ravines on Monte Pruche, on the Posina-Astico line, and began our advance down the Posina Valley. Our greatest progress was made on the right flank, where we occupied Pria Fora. In addition to occupying the various northern slopes of the Sette Comuni Plateau we captured on the north-east, Monte Cimone, Monte Castellaro, and Monte Delle-Contese. Along the whole front we found the enemy's trenches full of corpses. Much arms, ammunition, and food, were left by the enemy.

ENEMY SHIPS SUNK.

An Italian naval communique says:—Some of our units on Sunday entered the protected portion of Durazzo roadstead, and sank two steamers of 5000 and 3000 tons respectively, laden with ammunition. The units returned safely.

AUSTRIAN COMMUNIQUE.

A Vienna communique states: In order to safeguard full freedom of action we shortened our front between the Brenta and the Adige. This was carried out unnoticed and unhindered by the enemy and without casualties.

WESTERN FRONT.

VERDUN STRUGGLE.

BRITISH NIGHT RAIDS.

SUCCESS OF ANZACS.

LONDON, June 27.

A French communique states: A German night attack on our positions west of Thiaumont (east of the Meuse) completely failed.

We gained during local operations some enemy trenches in Fumin and Chenois Woods.

ENEMY REPORT.

The enemy's night attack westward of Mort Homme failed before our machine guns and artillery. The enemy attacked with the strongest forces on the right bank of the Meuse against our positions on Frio de Terre Ridge. The attack terminated during the evening in utter failure, being repulsed with great losses after some hand-to-hand fighting in our lines.

THE BRITISH FRONT.

M. Aristide Briand, the French Premier, visited the British front on Saturday and Sunday. He was accompanied by General Sir Douglas Haig, Commander-in-Chief of the British Forces.

General Sir Douglas Haig reports: We carried out a number of successful night raids at different points and penetrated hostile lines at ten different places, inflicting considerable casualties. Our casualties were everywhere very slight. The Munster Fusiliers and the Anzacs were particularly successful in connection with these raids.

There has been a good deal of artillery work on both sides. On Sunday night our artillery fired with great effect, and considerably damaged the hostile trenches in many places, also causing four large explosions in the enemy's rearward lines, between Pozieres and Mont Auben. Our artillery was again active to-day, damaging hostile defensive works, notably at Longueval, Gommecourt, Givenchy, Engohelle, north of the Loos salient, and east of Wieltje.

Out of 15 German kite balloons, our aircraft destroyed six. They were seen to fall in flames.

GERMAN CLAIM.

A German communique says:—There has been considerable activity the last two days on our front, opposite the British and northern French wing.

Our air squadron dropped bombs on the British camp near Doullens (north of Amiens).

EAST AFRICA.

ENEMY HEAVILY DEFEATED.

General Smuts heavily defeated the enemy on Friday upon the Lukigura River, 40 miles south of Handeni.

He reports:—We frontally attacked the enemy's strong position in dense bush on the west bank of the river. Another column, which arrived after a night-long march, attacked on the left flank and rear. We captured a pom-pom, two machine guns, quantities of rifles, ammunition, and many prisoners, including 11 Germans. Our casualties were four killed and 20 wounded. The enemy's losses were severe.

KARLSRUHE RAID.

GERMAN VERSION.

The German account of the French air raid on Karlsruhe (four miles east of the Rhine) says the town was en fete owing to the festival of Corpus Christi. The streets, and especially the recreation grounds and Hagenback's menagerie, were filled with people. News was received of the approach of an enemy air squadron at 3 p.m., but despite the sharpest look-out, no enemy was seen in the high sky, where white clouds of mist made observation difficult.

Suddenly two explosions were heard in the west. Soon afterwards, with the aid of powerful glasses, airmen were seen. They hovered over the town for a quarter of an hour and dropped 29 bombs. They then withdrew to the south-west.

The material damage was not great. Thirty men, five women, and 75 children were killed. Forty-eight men, 20 women, and 79 children were injured. Many were severely injured, and more deaths are expected.

ARABIA.

TURKISH LINES CUT.

CAIRO, June 26.

The Grand Shereef's troops have cut the telegraph lines and uprooted the Hedjaz railway. They also destroyed some stations 150 kilometres north, in order to prevent the Turks reinforcing.

BRITISH CABINET.

MORE RESIGNATIONS LIKELY.

LONDON, June 27.

It is feared that Lord Lansdowne (Minister without portfolio), Mr. Walter Long (President of the Local Government Board), Lord Robert Cecil (Under-Secretary to the Foreign Office) will follow Lord Selborne into retirement.

Mr. Bonar Law will preside at a general meeting of Unionists at the Carlton Club on Wednesday.

PRISONERS OF WAR.

STARVATION RATIONS.

Lord Robert Cecil (Under-Secretary of the Foreign Office), in reply to a question in the House of Commons, said that a further unfavourable report had been received, stating that the German authorities had deliberately reduced the official food rations to prisoners of war at Ruhleben. Between 60,000 and 300,000 marks (between £3000 and £15,000) had accumulated, which should have been spent on food. Germany had been informed that if she did not reply to Britain's protests within a week Britain would be compelled to consider a course in regard to German prisoners. Reports from the American Embassy show that the rations allowed are little more than one-third of the requisite allowance.

The German Government, he added, had been informed that if they were unable to feed their prisoners of war properly they should release them.

EASTERN FRONT.

TRANSYLVANIA.

PENETRATED BY RUSSIANS.

A ROME REPORT.

LONDON, June 26.

Telegrams from Petrograd received in Rome announce the fact that the Russians have penetrated the province of Transylvania.

It is officially stated in Petrograd that the Russians have approached the passes leading to Transylvania.

An enemy offensive east of Gorodistche and north of Baranovitchi was repulsed. We also repulsed an attack five versts south-west of Lipsk. The Germans from Kolki to Sokul bombarded our front, and carried out several local offensives, all of which were repulsed. We drove off repeated massed attacks at Linevka on the Stokhod River.

Don Cossacks crossed the Styr south of Buczacz, overthrew the enemy's advance guard, and occupied two villages. Our cavalry have also occupied positions near Pozoritta, ten versts west of Kimpolung.

An unofficial Petrograd message states that the Russians on the Kovel front advanced 48 miles in ten days until the rapidly-increasing enemy formations compelled them to slow down. They were then forced to defend themselves against the attacks of superior numbers, including the 10th Prussian Corps from Rheims, the 5th Bavarian Corps from Arras, and other troops from Laon and Verdun.

Prisoners state that the German Emperor said he intended to send seven German army corps to Kovel if necessary to retake Lutsk.

ENEMY CLAIMS.

A German communique says:—Fighting, in which we have been successful, is proceeding westward of Sokul and near Zaturce. Since the 16th General von Linsingen has captured 11,000 prisoners, two guns, and 54 machine-guns.

TOWARDS BAGHDAD.

RUSSIAN CAMPAIGN.

LONDON, June 26.

A Russian communique says:—We repulsed many Turkish night attacks in the Trebizond sector.

The enemy in northern Mesopotamia carried some sectors near Revanduza, but ultimately our counter-attack drove them out. We checked an offensive in the direction of Baghdad, inflicting severe losses.

TURKISH CLAIMS.

A Turkish communique claims to have routed the enemy in the northern reaches of the Chirokh on the Caucasus front, securing rich booty, including seven machine guns. The enemy, it is said, lost 2000 dead.

TORPEDOED.

TWO ITALIAN VESSELS.

LONDON, June 26.

A Paris message says that the Italian auxiliary cruiser Citta di Messina, 3495 tons, was torpedoed in the Straits of Otranto.

The Fourche, which was escorting her, attacked a submarine, which disappeared, but the Fourche was later herself torpedoed and sunk.

Nearly all the crew were saved.

CASEMENT TRIAL.

THE INDICTMENT.

APPLICATION TO QUASH.

The High Court galleries were packed to-day, while a crowd assembled outside, unable to gain admission to the trial on a charge of high treason of Sir Roger Casement and Daniel Julian Bailey, which commenced this morning.

Casement was neatly attired, and appeared less nervous and more self-confident than when he was before the police court. He bowed debonairly to the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Reading.

The indictment was in simple terms, and read:—"That you did solicit, incite, and endeavour to persuade the King's subjects, who were prisoners of war, to forsake their duty and allegiance to the King."

Before Casement was allowed to make his plea, Mr. Sullivan, for the defence, interposed and moved to quash the indictment on the ground that it was not alleged that the act was done in any territory over which the King had dominion.

The Judges consulted, and replied that the proper time to move to quash the indictment was after the case for the prosecution had been closed.

Casement then pleaded not guilty in a firm voice.

The prisoner challenged numerous jurymen, rejecting 19 for the twelfth juror.

The Attorney-General, Sir F. E. Smith, in opening the case said the prisoner had been guilty of a most heinous crime, and the jury would have to consider whether it had been aggravated by the position formerly held by the prisoner, who was an able, cultivated man, well versed politically, and not a lifelong rebel against England like some others in history. His career had been marked with great distinction. He had assisted in the consolidation and development of our great Empire, and eventually retired on an honourably-earned pension. The Attorney-General detailed the collection of Irish prisoners of war at Limburg, which was evidently for a special purpose. The prisoner at this time was apparently an honoured guest of the Germans, and was willing to play a part in seducing the captured Irish soldiers from their allegiance.

Sir F. E. Smith suggested that this was the forerunner of a German invasion of Ireland. The vast majority of the Irish prisoners treated Casement's rhetoric with contempt. Sir F. E. Smith then detailed the landing and arrest of Casement in Ireland.

John Cronin, of Cork, formerly a private in the 2nd Battalion, Royal Munster Fusiliers, who was wounded on August 27, 1914, at Etrux, and taken to Limburg camp, testified to Casement's activities. He believed that in the event of Germany winning a sea fight, the Irishmen who had joined Casement were to have landed in Ireland, but if Germany failed to win the war they would receive free passages to America, and the sum of £20.

The evidence closely followed that given in the police court trial.

RUDYARD KIPLING

ON THE NAVY.

(WRITTEN FROM OFFICIAL REPORTS.)

(COPYRIGHT 1916, BY RUDYARD KIPLING.)

LONDON, June 27.

Rudyard Kipling's third article, entitled "Ravages and Repairs," continues the adventures of British submarines in the Sea of Marmora, including the sinking of troopships and wheat ships, the burning of dhows, and the shelling of piers, railway stations, and encampments.

The best yarn is a detailed description of the E12's (Commander Bruce) adventures in a "cutting out" affair in the Sea of Marmora. Her main motors gave trouble from the first, and she was a cripple for most of the trip. She sighted two small steamers, one towing two and the other three sailing vessels, seven keels in all. She stopped the first steamer, and noticed that she carried stores, while the crew were all on deck with lifebelts.

Not seeing any gun the E12 ran alongside, and told the first lieutenant to board the steamer. The steamer then threw a bomb at the E12, which struck but did not explode, and also opened fire on the boarding party with rifles and a concealed one-inch gun. The E12 answered with six-pounders and rifles. The two sailing vessels in tow very properly tried to foul the E12's propellers and also fired rifles. It was as Orientally mixed a fight as a man could wish for. The first lieutenant and the boarding party were engaged on the steamer. The E12 fell foul of the steamer, and was in danger of being fouled by the sailing vessels. The E12's six-pounder methodically perforated the steamer from bow to stern, the steamer's one-inch gun and the sailing ship's rifles raking everything and everybody else.

The E12's coxswain on the conning tower passed up the ammunition, his vessel's one workable motor developing slight defects at a moment when the power to manoeuvre was vital.

The story is almost as difficult to disentangle as the actual mess must have been. At anyrate, the six-pounder caused an explosion among the steamer's ammunition, whereby she sank in a quarter of an hour, giving time, and a hot time it must have been, for the E12 to get clear and sink two sailing vessels. She then chased the second steamer, which slipped her three tows and ran for the shore. The E12 knocked her about a good deal by gunfire, and saw her drive on to the beach well alight, and as the beach opened fire with a gun at 1500 yards the E12 went away to re-tinker her motors and write up the log.

The E2 (Commander Stocks) carried an externally mounted gun, and while diving in the Dardanelles got hung up in the hawsers of a net which caught the conning tower and gun. The submarine backed, got up speed, forged ahead, and shored through the hawsers in one wild surge. But the submarine, wet, strained, and leaky, for the rest of the cruise, did her work though worried by torpedo-destroyers and hunted by aeroplanes. But throughout the chief pre-occupation was the strained gun mounting. Finally she got it firing again, but had to keep the water down by hand pumps coming home.

Rudyard Kipling concludes:—The submarines throughout never wittingly took the life of non-combatants. These were transferred to boats and personally conducted to safe "unexploding" beaches.

IRISH PROBLEM.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE'S PROPOSALS.

Mr. John Redmond, M.P., presided at a meeting of fifty Nationalist members of the House of Commons, held in Dublin, at which it was resolved, with only two dissentients, that it had learned with the deepest gratitude the decision of the Ulster conference to agree to the temporary exclusion of the six counties.

"This," the resolution added, "creates a new obligation upon the whole of Ireland to work uninterruptedly for the early restoration of a united self-governed nation, and in our judgment Mr. Lloyd George's proposals, which afford the best means for promoting that object, should be accepted."

AUSTRALIAN WOOL.

EXPORTS TO ITALY.

In the House of Commons to-night, Mr. Eugene Wason (Liberal) drew attention to Italy's large purchases of wool at the Sydney sales. He asked whether the Government would make special representations to Italy to see that none of the wool reached Germany and Austria.

Lord Robert Cecil, Under-Secretary to the Foreign Office, replied that the importance of preventing wool reaching the enemy had frequently been brought under the notice of the Italian Government, who had taken strict measures to prevent smuggling.

GENEROUS GIFT.

SINGAPORE, June 26.

The Sultan of Johore has presented to the British Government a squadron of aeroplanes, costing £31,500.

GENERAL VON BULOW.

KITCHENER MEMORIAL.

LONDON, June 26.

The House of Commons to-night agreed to the motion for the erection of a memorial at the public expense to the late Lord Kitchener.

ECONOMIC CONFERENCE.

In reply to questions in the House of Commons Mr. Asquith promised facilities to discuss the economic conference resolutions if it were generally desired.

ENGLISH MAILS.

Commencing with the R.M.S. Mongolia's departure many letters intended for that and later mails for the canal route have been delayed through ambiguous postal instructions. This will possibly result in goods arriving before the documents.

THE JUTLAND BATTLE

TELL-TALE WRECKAGE.

LONDON, June 26.

An Amsterdam message says that a Dutch trawler passed a mass of wreckage off the Danish coast, and picked up a lifeboat with a number of caps marked "Koenig Wilhelm," evidently belonging to the Hamburg-American liner, which is supposed to have been used as an auxiliary cruiser, and was sunk in the Jutland fight.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS.

In the House of Commons Mr. Asquith promised to make a statement to-morrow with regard to conscientious objectors.

Mr. H. J. Tennant, Under-Secretary for War, said that 34 conscientious objectors had been sentenced to death, but in all cases the sentences had been commuted to penal servitude.

DARDANELLES PAPERS.

Mr. Asquith stated in the House of Commons that he hoped the papers in connection with the Dardanelles campaign would be available before the end of the session.

ZINC CORPORATION.

At the annual meeting of shareholders of the Zinc Corporation, Mr. F. A. Govett, chairman of directors, defended the action of the corporation in refusing to join the Spelter Amalgamation. That refusal, he said, was because the terms were very unfavourable. Any insinuation that the attitude of the corporation was unpatriotic was disproved by its efforts to cancel its German contract. The corporation was still negotiating for the treatment of its own concentrates, and was awaiting the results of experiments.

The shareholders of the Zinc Corporation have refused the demand of Mr. F. C. Auld, representing many Scottish shareholders, for a committee of enquiry to consider charges of mismanagement. Mr. Govett has been re-elected chairman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Gordon Campbell has handed over to the Red Cross Society the first instalment of £50,000 from the meat trade, £20,000 of which is from the Argentine.

All minimum prices on the Stock Exchange were abolished on Monday.

LATE WAR NEWS.

VERDUN.

ENEMY'S VIOLENT EFFORT.

PARIS, June 27.

A semi-official report states that the enemy's violent effort between June 21 and 24 in the Thiaumont-Fleury sector was made at the cost of sanguinary losses which were completely disproportionate to the results obtained. The effort momentarily exhausted the Germans, even the bombardment slackening on both banks, except in the region of Hill 304, where a vigorous duel continues.

ENEMY CROPS DAMAGED.

AMSTERDAM, June 27.

Severe hailstorms seriously damaged corn and hay in Hungary; also crops in Thuringia (Germany).

WAR NOTES.

ITALIAN PREPARATIONS FOR ADVANCE.

The later messages regarding the advance of the Italians on the Trentino front give further proof of the necessity for extensive preparation and efficient organisation prior to the commencement of a successful offensive. It is the story of the Southern Russian front retold, and the wonderful preparatory work which General Brussiloff effected behind his lines, before launching the recent big Russian offensive, has no doubt been an object lesson to the Italians. Work has been in hand behind the Italian lines which was similar to that upon which the Russians were occupied before the capture of Lutsk, although, of course, it was carried out under different conditions. Roads have been constructed, heavy guns lifted into position, and everything made ready for the moment when the advance was to commence. The whole of the preparations appear to have been carried out with speed and secrecy, and these two factors gave the Italians the advantage of the element of surprise. When they eventually advanced after a tremendous bombardment of the enemy's lines, they succeeded in capturing in a day positions, to secure which the enemy had spent months of severe fighting. The Austrian communique states that they have merely shortened their line between the Brenta and Adige rivers; but there is little doubt that the shortening process was forced upon them by the excellent preparations made by the Italians, and that their withdrawal was not the simple and unhindered operation which the communique makes it out to have been.

THE COURSE OF THE OFFENSIVE.

When the Austrians started their offensive movement against Italy some time ago they drove their main wedge down over the border in a south-easterly direction across the Sette Comuni plateau towards the towns of Asiago in the east and Arsiero in the west. They also pushed their way down the valley known as Vallarsa, running south-east from Rovereto in the Trentino towards the Italian border. The main thrust into Italian territory was that which reached Arsiero and Asiago, and when those two towns fell into the hands of the Austrians some fears were entertained as to whether the Italians would be able to hold up the advance. Our ally, however, directed his attention towards the wings, and brought pressure to bear on the enemy's line there. This prevented him from pushing his advance further, owing to the danger of attempting to make progress with such a narrow front. To-day's cables show that, after violent bombardment, the advance was started all along the line from Vallarsa (near the border between Posina and the Adige River), right round below Arsiero, Cesuna, Asiago, and to the north-east of the Sette Comuni plateau. The first place captured in Vallarsa was Raossi, which is situated about two and a half miles over the border in the Trentino, on the road which winds along this valley towards Rovereto. About a mile or more further on along this road are the villages of Aste St. Anna, and Staineri, which were fired by the Austrians as they retreated up the valley. Further pressure was brought to bear on the Posina-Astico line, eastward of Vallarsa, and the succession of captures from Arsiero to the north-east of Sette Comuni indicate how marked was the advance of the remainder of the Italian line. The capture of Mount Cengio, to the north-east of Arsiero, should seriously affect the safety of that town, as it commands portion of the valley which runs south-west from Arsiero towards Posina. This, combined with the capture of Mount Pria Fora, to the south-west of Arsiero, should induce the early evacuation of the town by the Austrians.

PROGRESS OF SOUTHERN RUSSIAN ARMIES.

Apart from the overrunning of Bukovina by the Russians, operations on the southern-eastern front have been confined to isolated fighting, and minor advances by both sides during the past few days. General Brussiloff's main thrust into the enemy line in Volhynia is still threatening important points, but the Russians are at present prevented from pushing it home by the repeated attacks of the reinforced Austro-German armies in Volhynia. The Petrograd communique admits that the enemy has been hammering away at the northern end of this thrust from Kolki to Sokul. The enemy's object in attacking here is to keep their opponents from widening the front of their thrust preparatory to advancing on Kovel and Vladimir-Volynski. Linevka, where the Russians claim to have repulsed repeated massed attacks, is on the Stochod River, about two and a half miles to the eastward of Svidniki, which is on the Kovel-Rovno railway. Svidniki is about 20 miles to the south-east of Kovel, and is the nearest point in the Russian line to that important railway junction. In Bukovina the Russians have been most successful, and have gained possession of practically the whole of the province. In retreating towards the south from Czernowitz, the Austrians took advantage of the railway to Dorna Vatra, at the eastern end of the Carpathians. This railway skirts the Roumanian border, and in the course of the pursuit the Russians tried to drive large bodies of the enemy across into this neutral territory, but so far we have had no official intimation of this aim having been actually achieved. A satisfactory feature of the operations in this region was the speed with which the Russians followed up the retreating Austrians, a task which General Pflanzer, no doubt, made as difficult as possible, by destroying the roads, railways, and bridges as he fell back. The Russians are now reported to have reached Posoritta, about six and a half miles to the west of Kimpolung, and about 60 miles south-west of Czernowitz. They are still following the railway line to Dorna Vatra, and are certainly approaching the passes leading to Transylvania, but the unofficial announcement that they have penetrated that province seems premature.

THE WESTERN FRONT.

It is not yet clear whether the bombardment of the German lines from the British front is the forerunner of an early advance there or not, but General Sir Douglas Haig's report regarding the night attacks which penetrated the enemy's lines at ten different places gives rise to the opinion that these raids have largely been due to a desire to estimate the damage caused to the enemy's lines by the bombardment. It is possible, also, that the bombardment is being carried out with a view to relieving the pressure around Verdun. Very little news had come through late last night regarding the position of the defenders of the old French fortress, and they are probably experiencing one of those lulls which occur periodically in the course of the German offensive. The French announce the failure of a German night attack west of Thiaumont, and the Germans make a similar announcement regarding two French attacks, one on the western side of the Meuse, and the other on the eastern side. Regarding the suggestions which have been made as to the purpose of the German attacks on Verdun, the Paris correspondent of the "Evening Standard" states that Gustave Tery has consulted, amongst other documents bearing on the subject, the memorandum presented to M. Bethmann-Hollweg last May by the great ironmasters of Germany, and this is what he finds there:—"The continuation of the war would have been impossible but for the fact that the output of iron and steel has been doubled since August, 1914. . . . Now, the article of first necessity in the manufacture of iron and steel is the ore of Lorraine, known as 'minette,' which enters into the work in the proportion of from 60 to 80 per cent. Should the supply of this ore be interrupted, the war would be practically at an end for us." . . . "Thus," says Tery, "the importance of Verdun, the fortress of French Lorraine, lies in this pressing need to insure the uninterrupted productions of 'minette.' A glance at the map shows that the Jarny mines are only 25 kilometres from Verdun, and that the mines of Landres and Conflans begin at a distance of 26 kilometres from Verdun at the most. . . . The future security of the German Empire depends upon the possession of all the Lorraine mines of 'minette,' together with the fortresses of Verdun and Longwy, without which it is impossible to defend the region."

DALY RIVER FARM.

A GLOOMY PICTURE.

MANAGER LEAVES THE TERRITORY.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

After 12 months' experience as manager of the Daly River demonstration farm in the Northern Territory, Mr. H. Boys has returned to Victoria, having resigned from his position on account, as he says, of "the attitude of the Administrator, Dr. Gilruth, and of the disaster which will, in his opinion, attend the dairying scheme at the Daly River, and the utter hopelessness of the Daly River settlement ever being in the least degree a success."

In regard to the Daly River situation, Mr. Boys stated that all the money which had been spent there had been thrown away. No good would ever come out of it while the present policy was pursued. Most of the settlers had been induced to go there by the roseate prospects conjured up by the Administrator. They have already abandoned their holdings, leaving their stock, implements, and houses in order to avoid complete ruin. Only five settlers remain in the district. The only way to make anything out of this land, in Mr. Boys' opinion, is to cut it up into areas of from 300 to 500 square miles, and stock it with cattle. Recently Dr. Gilruth had reported that things were going well at the Batchelor farm, when, as a matter of fact, he, Mr. Boys, held a letter from the manager to the effect that conditions on the farm were in a very bad way, and that only 125 head of stock were left on the place out of 265 head. "That," said Mr. Boys, "is the result of the policy of over-stocking. The Batchelor farm was carrying 80 head of stock to the mile, and the result is that 140 have been lost."

Mr. Boys considered that Daly River would never be a successful dairy farming settlement, and that it was therefore most unfair to induce settlers to go there and take up dairying.

STURT SEAT.

BROKEN HILL, Tuesday.

Mr. W. D. Barnett, secretary of the A.M.A., has been selected to oppose Mr. J. H. Cann as member for Sturt in the Legislative Assembly in the P.L.L. preliminary ballot.

CHINA.

ADMIRAL'S DEMAND.

SHANGHAI, June 27.

Admiral Li Ming Hsen (Commander-in-Chief) has demanded that Li Huan Hung (Temporary President) restore the provisional convention of the old Parliament which the late Yuan Shih Kai dissolved, and form a new Cabinet, otherwise the navy will declare its independence.

ELEPHANT ISLAND.

SHACKLETON'S EFFORT

TO RESCUE COMRADES

BLOCKED BY ICE.

(COPYRIGHT IN AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND BY THE AUSTRALIAN PRESS ASSOCIATION; IN GREAT BRITAIN BY THE "DAILY CHRONICLE"; AND IN AMERICA BY THE NEW YORK "WORLD.")

LONDON, June 26.

Sir Ernest Shackleton telegraphs from Port Stanley:—

"I returned here from an attempt to reach Elephant Island in a vessel which the Uruguayan Government kindly lent. I greatly regret to report that I was unable to effect the rescue of the comrades I left there in an icehole.

"I encountered much heavier ice conditions than in my previous attempt in May in Captain Thomas's South Georgian whaler. We encountered stream ice 60 miles to the northward of Elephant Island. We passed through this successfully and reached within 20 miles of the island, but owing to the heavy impenetrable pack, interspersed by numerous icebergs, also the high north-westerly swell, it was impossible to proceed.

"The ice stretched in crescent form from west-north-west through south to the north-east, the two horns being 60 miles from the island. This winter's ice conditions are so bad that the ultimate rescue of the men will only be possible with a wooden steam vessel or an icebreaker. We saw Gentoo Penguins on the edge of the ice. These will supplement the party's food which is mainly bovril and rations of high calorific value. Mr. Wild, seeing the ice conditions, would early drastically economise with his stores, going on to half rations, supplemented by penguins.

"We left 12 cases of sledging rations seven miles northward of Ocean Camp, which we formed when the Endurance foundered. I cannot say whether the party can reach them. Though they are hard pressed, hope must not be given up of their ultimate rescue."

THE MAROONED PARTY.

The "Daily Chronicle" says that Sir Ernest Shackleton's message will evoke universal regret. It makes the position of the marooned party most serious. Another attempt must be made. Apparently there is no suitable vessel in South American waters, and the question is how long will it take to find, equip, and despatch a ship southward?

Mr. Frank Houlder has cabled to South Africa hoping it will be possible to find a suitable Dundee whaler among those at the Cape Whaling Station.

The Aurora would be entirely suitable if it is possible to repair and send her from New Zealand in time. Even if there is ice surrounding the island, a strong gale might at any moment disperse it, leaving free access.

THE AURORA.

WELLINGTON (N.Z.), Tuesday.

A telegram from Dunedin states that the Aurora will go into Port Chalmers dock to-morrow. It is definitely settled that Captain Stenhouse will have charge of the party for the relief of Macintosh and his men left at Cape Royds.

JUDGE'S SON.

KILLED IN ACTION.

While sitting in the Darlinghurst Causes Court yesterday news was brought to Mr. Justice Ferguson by the State Commandant himself (General Ramaciotti) that the former's son, Captain Arthur Gardere Ferguson, had been killed in action in France on the 14th of this month. Captain Ferguson was in his 24th year, and left Sydney on June 26, 1915, as first lieutenant. Prior to enlisting he had held a commission with the Scottish Rifles for two or three years, and, after passing through the Sydney Grammar School, studied law at the Sydney University. His battalion reached Egypt at the time of the Suvla Bay landing, one of the consequences of which being that they were hurried into action at once. He was on the peninsula from August 24 till the evacuation, during which time he was promoted to the rank of captain, and given command of B company. From the peninsula he went, after a brief spell in Egypt, to France, being among the first to go forward.

Only an hour or two before the arrival in court of General Ramaciotti with the tidings Mr. Justice Ferguson had received two letters from his son, in which he reported that he was feeling fit, but that his company had been pretty heavily engaged, and that he had lost two officers killed and had two others wounded, beside many men. That letter was written about the middle of May, and he was half expecting then that his company was about to secure a well-earned respite in England. Apparently, however, that relief was not theirs.

The same mail brought several letters to Professor MacCallum from his son, who also is somewhere in the British lines in France. In the course of one of the letters young MacCallum said:—"Arthur Ferguson has been doing excellent work, and shone out the other night under rather severe circumstances, earning the approbation of everyone in the brigade. Is this not nice? I was very pleased to hear it it." In another letter the same correspondent wrote to his father,—"Arthur and 'Blue' Harper (son of Principal Harper, of St. Andrew's College) are doing good work, particularly Arthur."

The late Captain Ferguson was the second eldest son of Mr. Justice Ferguson; the eldest died a few years ago in New South Wales. The youngest, and only remaining son, is now on the way to the front, having left with the commission of lieutenant as second in command of a division of a cyclist corps.

In legal circles, when the fact became definitely known, sincere regret was felt by members of both branches of the profession. Among pressmen, and especially those with whom his Honor was closely associated prior to being called to the Bar, the same sympathy was expressed.

SHEARERS' STRIKE.

EMPLOYERS REJECT THE DEMANDS.

WALGETT, Tuesday.

The shearers' strike in the Walgett district still continues, and during the past week several meetings were held. They have now formulated their demands in full, and ask for 30/ per hundred for shearing, 27/6 for stud flocks, 60/ for rams and stags, a comb and cutter allowance of 1s per hundred; shed hands to receive £3 per week, and to have the right to elect their own cook; pressers to receive 7d per cwt., and 3d extra for branding and weighing, without stacking. They have also decided to fix no general price for cooks at the present time, but demand that the price lists for goods supplied be inspected before signing on. Telegrams have been received, and are posted up round the town to the effect that meetings have been held in Sydney by men in support of the strike, and it would appear that at present there is no intention of proceeding with the work of getting the wool off.

So far no other sheds have started, and at a meeting of the members of the Pastoralists' Union, held in Walgett on Saturday, it was decided not to accede to the demands, but to await the sitting of the Arbitration Court in October next, when the present award expires. More men are still continuing to arrive in Walgett, and so far all are standing firm to the strike demand. Ever since the demand has been made the weather has been very unsettled, and raining, so that there would not have been any shearing had everything been satisfactory. The strikers have issued a report wherein they repudiate Mr. H. Lestrange, and state that he has nothing to do with them in the matter. They have appointed an executive to deal with all matters. At present, as appearances go, there seems to be no prospect of shearing until October next, at the earliest.

SHIPPING LINE

FOR AUSTRALIA

BOUGHT BY MR. HUGHES.

FIFTEEN STEAMERS

TO CARRY WHEAT.

LONDON, June 26.

The "Evening Standard" says that the Prime Minister of Australia (Mr. Hughes) has purchased a line of steamers for the transport of the Australian wheat harvest.

Mr. Hughes has authorised the following statement for publication:—

The difficulty of obtaining tonnage rates threatening to become acute induced the Commonwealth to purchase steamers to ease the situation.

We have already purchased fifteen good, serviceable, modern, cargo steamers, averaging 8000 tons. Their cost, though much higher than before the war, is, nevertheless, favourable. It will be known as the Commonwealth Government line.

It is hoped, with a fair allotment of other British tonnage, that producers, who ordinarily dispose of 80 per cent. of their output within the Empire, will be able to send their products to the home markets.

Messrs. Turner, Davidson, and Company purchased the steamers on behalf of Mr. Hughes.

The transaction caused a flutter in the market where the purchases were attributed to the Cunard Line or the P. and O. Company. The Commonwealth Bank had already paid a huge cheque.

Mr. H. G. B. Larkin, the High Commissioner's shipping expert, has been appointed general manager of the new line, and Messrs. Turner, Davidson, and Company, of London, brokers. Many of the vessels are now employed in Government business, and will be sent to Australia to load wheat as they become available. It is not intended to carry passengers.

The following vessels have been bought: Strathendrick, Strathavon, Strathairly, Strathord, Strathleven, Strathdee, Strathspey, Strathgarry, Strathbeg, Strathesk, Ardangorm, Ardanmohr, Vermont, Daltonhall, and Kirkoswald.

MR. HUGHES'S DEPARTURE.

Mr. and Mrs. Hughes have sailed, en route for Australia.

Mr. and Mrs. Hughes and staff travelled by special train to Salisbury, and thence to Devonport. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher, Mr. and Mrs. Ryan, Mr. Billyard Leake, Senator M'Dougall, Colonel Sir Newton Moore, and General Sellheim accompanied them, and bade them farewell.

Mr. Hughes's last moments were occupied in saying kindly words to 400 sick and wounded Australians who were also homeward bound.

THE SHIPPING MANAGER.

Mr. Herbert Larkin, who has been selected to manage the Commonwealth Government shipping line, entered the service of the Australasian United Steam Navigation Company in 1890 as a clerk. In 1914 he had risen to the position of chief clerk, and had charge of all oversea business. On the outbreak of war, one of the leading shipping men in Melbourne was asked to recommend a suitable man to control Commonwealth transports. He recommended Mr. Larkin as one of the ablest shipping men in the city, and Mr. Larkin's services were commandeered by the Naval Department. After managing transport work in Australia with complete satisfaction for some time, Mr. Larkin was sent to London to control the business of the Australian Naval Department at that end.

The Acting Prime Minister (Senator Pearce), who is at Port Fairy, stated to-night that Mr. Hughes had intimated that he would announce all details of the purchase of steamers when he returned to Melbourne.

FEDERAL MINISTERS GRATIFIED.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

When asked to-night if the Federal Ministry had received word from Mr. Hughes concerning the purchase of 15 ships, Senator Russell, who administers freight matters for the Ministry, stated that a message had been received confirming the purchase of the fleet, but that the number of the vessels mentioned was not 15. If the press messages were correct, they referred to business which had been concluded subsequent to the despatch of the only official message that he had seen.

He expressed great gratification at the success of Mr. Hughes's negotiations in the matter of the purchase of these ships, and said that the addition of these 15 vessels to the tonnage already available would help materially in solving the problems presented in the marketing of the wheat crop.

Labour politicians, generally, are also particularly gratified at the news that a Commonwealth-owned line of steamers was to be put into operation in the near future. The establishment of a Government-owned fleet has long been a plank in the platform of the Federal Labour party, and although the primary object in this purchase was to find freights for the shifting of the wheat crop, politicians who favour the socialist policy see in it the first step to the formation of a large fleet, which will be run in competition with those privately-owned lines which are now operating from Australia oversea. It is hoped by these politicians that before very long the mails, which are at present carried by the Orient Company at a cost to the Commonwealth of £170,000 a year, will be conveyed on Government-owned ships. Despite the fact that the Commonwealth fleet was purchased at a time when shipping commanded a price very much in excess of that which ruled under normal conditions, the Federal Ministry is confident that the purchase will not only help to relieve the difficulties in the way of shipping the wheat harvest, but will also return a handsome profit to the Treasury.

The purchase of a fleet of vessels for oversea trading has twice been recommended to the Federal Parliament by Royal Commissions. In 1906 a commission of Parliamentarians, which was appointed to consider the question of the carriage of mails between Australia and the United Kingdom, submitted a report the main recommendation of which was that eight vessels of 12,000 tons should be purchased or built to carry the mails, and to assist in providing freights for the carriage of Australian produce to Great Britain and the Continent. The recommendation, however, was not given effect to. In 1914 another Royal Commission, appointed to inquire into the Australian fruit industry, particularly with regard to the export of Australian fruit to Great Britain, also recommended that a line of oversea steamships should be established. The fruit commission also recommended that an interstate steamship service should be established. On this occasion also, however, the recommendation of the commission was not given effect to.

SUCCESS DOUBTED.

Mr. T. I. Campbell, general secretary of the Farmers and Settlers' Association, stated last night that the purchase of the steamers could not be effective until they reached Australian waters. "Assuming," he said, "that they were ready to come out, and would be here in a couple of months—at the end of August—

They could shift 60,000 tons, and there were about 2,630,000 tons to be taken. It would take them two months to get here, and about four months to do the round trip with wheat. This would bring us to the end of the year. If the ships were fully employed they could have only a small effect on the clearing of the harvest. That is, of course, assuming that this is all the freight we shall have. The whole of the wheat freight has to be secured through two firms by arrangement with the Commonwealth Government, and we are asking Mr. Pigott, M.P., to get a statement from the Federal authorities as to the effect of limiting the freight in this way. I may say that I have little confidence in the success of any interference by the Government in handling an enterprise of this character. I believe that farmers would have fared better with the removal of the embargo on all the firms in securing freight."

ACTING PREMIER'S VIEW.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

Speaking to-day at the Farmers' Convention luncheon at Port Fairy, the Acting Prime Minister said he thought that they would all agree Mr. Hughes had, while abroad, done good work for Australia and for the Empire (Applause.) The news which had been received on Monday was of particular interest to farmers. This was that Mr Hughes had bought for Australia a fleet of ships which would be used to convey their produce oversea. (Cheers.) A good many people in ordinary times would canvass the wisdom of that action, but the war had taught Australians how deeply interested they were in transporting their produce abroad. The war had shown that steps had to be taken, however drastic, to land our produce in other parts of the world.

A DUBIOUS BARGAIN.

SHIPPING MANAGER'S VIEW.

"This purchase by Mr. Hughes only seems to me to be a drop in the ocean," said Mr Herbert Jefferson, general manager of the McArthur Shipping and Agency Company, Ltd., which represents the Clan Line in Australia, in reply to a "Herald" reporter last night. "I do not think the competition of these steamers will have any effect on the more modern steamers trading to Australia now. They are not fast enough, and the price of wool is such that one cannot afford to send it in slow steamers. From what I have heard and what I know I don't think these newly-purchased steamers are very fast.

"This is a bad time to buy steamers," added Mr. Jefferson, "and I think a mistake has been made in trying to get vessels at below the world's market rate. Any amount of up-to-date tonnage could have been obtained at the market price. The money spent now on these vessels would have gone a considerable way towards purchasing up-to-date steamers after the war."

THE "STRATH" STEAMERS

Although steamers of the "Strath" line have not visited Australian waters for some time, they were, before the war, fairly frequent traders between Australia and America. Some of them were engaged in the lumber trade from Puget Sound, while others were almost regular coal-carriers to the West American coast. They were regarded as useful cargo ships, and have a carrying capacity of about 7000 tons.

I am very proud to have such an interesting memento of our visit to this city, and I will hang it in my cabin as a souvenir of your kindness. Please convey my sincere compliments to all the citizens whom we had the honour to come into contact with in this city."

WAR LOAN.

NEPEAN LABOUR PROTEST.

MR. HIGGS'S COMMENTS.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

"Some men have a queer idea of their duty to the country," said the Federal Treasurer (Mr. Higgs), commenting on the report to the effect that the Nepean Federal Labour Council had agreed to a motion protesting against his action in circularising employees in connection with the new Commonwealth War Loan.

"We are either at war or we are not at war," he continued. "The Government must have money to pay for the transport, equipment, training, and maintenance of the brave men who have volunteered for active service. If we cannot get the money in Australia we must borrow it in London or elsewhere, and pay a higher rate of interest than we are paying for our local war loans. Those Australians who cannot go to the front should subscribe to the loans if they can afford to do so. I was most careful not to use in the circulars any language which might suggest intimidating the employees. I used the words, 'I invite you to help to raise the necessary money,' and I said, 'While there are thousands who must devote all they earn to sustaining their families, there are still hundreds of thousands, I venture to say, who could save at least £10 during the coming year.' One speaker at the Nepean council meeting said 'That the wage-earner who received between £2 and £3 a week was not in a position to subscribe to the war loan.' There are hundreds of unmarried young ladies who receive £2 a week who can save 5s a week for a period of 12 months without very great self-denial. There are thousands of single young men who receive £3 a week who can and ought to do the same. I regret that there are some men who will neither subscribe to the war loan nor allow others to do so. Fortunately for Australia, such men are few in number."

RECRUITING.

At Victoria Barracks yesterday 98 men volunteered, and of these 72 were accepted.

OTHER STATES.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

In Victoria to-day 90 men volunteered, and 53 were accepted.

BRISBANE, Tuesday.

Thirty recruits were accepted in Queensland to-day.

PERTH (W.A.), Tuesday.

The total number of recruits for the week ended Saturday was 206, and on Monday 86 more entered camp.

A CREW STRIKE.

VESSEL PUT UNDER NAVAL CONTROL.

MINISTER'S PROMPT ACTION.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

Firm action was taken by the Minister for Navy (Mr. Jensen) when members of the Federated Seamen's Union adopted a high-handed attitude towards the Naval Department a few days ago. The trouble was caused by firemen on a steamer demanding overtime rates for shifting ashes. This was denied them, and they ceased work. At a later stage the seamen on the ship also went on strike, and, as a result, the steamer was sent away to-day manned by a crew of Naval Reserve men.

In a statement to-day, the Minister said:—"The Federated Seamen's Union called out the firemen and seamen employed on the steamer. The firemen refused to shift the ashes or dump them overboard during their watch, unless they were paid overtime rates for it. A representative of the union waited on me, and asked me to pay this overtime rate. I refused, but said that I was prepared to allow the matter of shifting the ashes from the stokehole, to be left in the hands of the engineer or the captain of the ship. If the firemen had excessive work, I was prepared to pay them overtime for dumping the ashes; but if the work was not excessive, I expected the men to shift the ashes during their watch. Several ships under the control of this department have left under the same conditions. The firemen refused to sail under these conditions, with the result that I placed Naval Reserve firemen on board, and the ship proceeded to Newcastle for bunker coal. When she arrived back in Melbourne a deputation from the union again waited on me, and asked me to relax the conditions mentioned. I could not see my way to do so, and they called out the seamen on the ship. I immediately placed the ship under naval discipline, and put Naval Reserve seamen on board. The steamer left to-day on time. This is the first steamer to leave Australia under naval discipline."

CITY FIRES.

SUSPICIONS OF THE POLICE.

In view of the rather alarming number of fires that have broken out of late in soft-goods establishments in the city the police have been led to suspect incendiarism. This suspicion has been strengthened by the fact that at one establishment—Mark Foy's, Limited—a piece of cotton waste, smelling of a well-known highly inflammable chemical, was found nearly three weeks ago amongst some shirts in the mercery department. This chemical can be dissolved in liquid, and when the liquid dries, if the chemical is present in sufficient quantity, the waste will of itself take fire.

A second attempt was made to fire a bulk store in another part of the city by breaking a window and throwing in a piece of waste saturated with the chemical. The fire was found in time, and put out. Other suspicious outbreaks have been reported to the police, and all points to the conclusion that attempts have been made by the use of the chemical referred to to cause fires.

SOUTH COAST MINE.

PURCHASE BY HOSKINS AND SONS.

DAPTO, Tuesday.

The Wongawilli coal-mining property at West Dapto, owned by a Wollongong and Dapto syndicate, and situated about three miles from the latter town, has been purchased by Messrs. Hoskins and Sons, of Lithgow. The property embraces an area of 300 acres, and in addition a farm adjacent has been bought by the firm, upon which to erect workmen's cottages. The intention of the firm is to convert the coal obtained from the mine into coke for their own use, and already a start has been made to build two large dams at the foot of the mountain to impound the water required for the coke works. A railway is to be built to connect the mine with the South Coast railway. The purchase of the property by Messrs. Hoskins and Sons has created much jubilation in Dapto, which promises in the near future to become a thriving centre. Already a boom in property has set in, and several properties have changed hands during the last few days.

RETURNED SOLDIERS.

QUESTION OF EMPLOYMENT.

BRISBANE, Tuesday.

The Queensland Recruiting Committee on Monday brought under notice of the Minister for Trade and Customs certain matters which they asked him to mention to the Minister for Defence. The committee also brought up the question of preference in employment not being given to returned soldiers unless they were members of the unions.

Mr. Tudor drew their attention to the fact that no one could receive permanent employment in the Commonwealth service unless he passed the prescribed examination. Returned soldiers, he said, were given the same temporary employment as that in which trade unionists previously got preference. The position was this, said the Minister, first the returned soldiers, then the unionist, and finally the general public. This he thought had been made clear by Mr. Fisher, and later in Parliament by himself.

WRECKED BARQUE MANUNUI.

SURVIVORS IN SYDNEY.

Wrecked at Empire Island in the barque Manunui, on May 26, Captain W. Robertson, with his two officers and crew of eight men, arrived in Sydney yesterday from Noumea by the F.M.S. Pacifique.

According to the story of the shipwrecked men, the Manunui sailed from Noumea on May 23, with a cargo of coal for Surprise Island, about 350 miles to the north of New Caledonia. Fair winds prevailed for three days, but on May 26, when the barque was fairly close to her destination the breeze dropped altogether. In the dead calm the vessel could only drift helplessly, and was at the mercy of the strong-running currents which are usually to be found in the vicinity of groups of coral islands.

The Manunui was carried along for some time by a west-south-west current, and as the night was rather dark, there was no chance of seeing for any distance ahead. At 4.30 that night a reef was sighted 50 yards ahead, and before anything could be done to stop the vessel, she was carried well on to the reef.

The wind, which a couple of hours earlier would have saved the vessel, commenced to blow about midnight, and developed into a stiff breeze. By morning the sea had worked up and a heavy surf was breaking over the vessel. As she already showed signs of breaking up, it was decided to abandon the vessel, and at daylight a boat was launched and the crew managed to get ashore through the surf on to Surprise Island. The captain remained on board for another hour, when he was taken ashore by the native crew of the manager of the guano works on the island. Together with the crew he was able to save most of his personal effects.

At the end of ten days portion of the Manunui was still on the reef, but she had been badly smashed by the surf. The shipwrecked men were then taken in the guano company's cutter to an island about 70 miles away, where they were picked up by the French steamer St. Antoine and taken to Noumea.

The Manunui was a wooden barque of 358 tons, built at Denmark in 1896. She was owned by the Thora Ship Company.

SCHOOL TEACHERS.

HIGHER SALARIES WANTED.

A meeting of the delegates of the city, suburban, and country branches of the Teachers' Association of New South Wales was held yesterday at the Department of Education. The purpose of the conference was to decide to ask for increases of salary, the range of such increases, and what means should be adopted to obtain the increases. Mr. T. T. Roberts, M.A., president of the association, presided.

A motion was adopted, asking for an increase in salary for all grades of teachers, with a commencing salary of £156 per annum for unclassified teachers. The maximum salary for headmasters and headmistresses was left for determination by a special committee appointed from the delegates present. The present minimum salary of an unclassified teacher is £110. It was pointed out that there were married teachers in the service of the department endeavouring to live upon that allowance. In raising the claim to £156 the conference was guided largely by the latest statistics showing the present cost of living, and also by the awards of the Industrial Court. In the discussion upon the salaries of higher grade teachers it was stated that better salaries were paid to the leaders of education in Great Britain and America than in this State. The following resolution was carried:—"(a) That this conference does not apply for registration whereby it may apply for the adjudication of an Industrial Court; (b) that the Teachers' Association apply to the Premier and to the Minister for Education to grant the increases in salaries, and, further, that the teachers have direct representation upon the departmental board appointed to adjudge the salaries of teachers in various sections."

LIEUT.-COL. HOWELL PRICE.

RAPID PROMOTION.

The recent announcement of the promotion of Major Owen G. Howell Price, son of the Rev. J. Howell Price, of Waterloo, to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, in command of the 3rd Battalion, is confirmed by advice received yesterday.

The young officer, who is only 26 years of age, went away with the 3rd Battalion in October, 1914, as second-lieutenant, and has gone step by step up the ladder, having been successively lieutenant, captain, major temporarily and then permanently, and now lieutenant-colonel in command. It is believed that he is the youngest officer occupying such a position in the army.

Another brother, Lieutenant John Howell Price, who was one of those saved from the Alcantara, has been appointed navigating lieutenant in one of the submarines.

HEAVY RAIN IN QUEENSLAND.

BRISBANE, Tuesday.

A number of stations in the western portion of the State report good rainfalls. In many places up to an inch and a half was registered. A telegram from St. George states that splendid rain of a general character fell last night, the downpour being the heaviest experienced for the last two years, and of a beneficial nature throughout. The whole district of Bollon and the border districts also had heavy falls. This rain following on the two previous falls indicates that the long drought at last is broken, and good winter herbage will result.

UNIVERSAL SERVICE.

The Universal Service League has arranged a public meeting in the Town Hall to-night.

HOTELKEEPER'S DEATH.

Mr. Alexander James M'Gregor, 50, who has been licensee of the North Annandale Hotel, Annandale, for the past eight years, died yesterday at a private hospital at Killara as the result of injuries received in a motor car accident at Hornsby on Sunday last. The late Mr. M'Gregor's wife is at present in England. His only son is serving with the Australian forces.

NEW ABATTOIRS.

A deputation representative of Master Carcase Butchers and the Meat Industry Employees' Union waited on the Chief Secretary (Mr. Black) yesterday to discuss the erection, on the new abattoirs area at Homebush, of dwellings for the workmen employed at the works. Both organisations, said Mr. Black after the interview, were in entire accord, and jointly pressed for the houses, which would prove of great convenience.

"I promised to submit the matter to my colleagues," the Minister said. "It is a matter either for the Housing Board or the Public Works Department. I think it is a good idea. It would be better for the industry and better for the men if they were stationed close to the works. I think a model suburb could be established there."

The Minister also promised the deputation to have an inspection in the vicinity of Glebe Island with regard to the provision of a meat receiving and distributing depot there, with access to the water if possible.

RETURNED SOLDIER'S THANKS.

Sergeant Buckley, a returned soldier, who has taken up his residence at French's Forest, writes as follows:—"I want to thank the Voluntary Workers' Association, particularly Dr. Arthur, Mr. George Fitzpatrick, Mr. Dykes, Alderman Christiansen, and the members of the Vaucluse branch who have worked Saturdays and Sundays building my home at French's Forest. The final act was performed on Monday. Mr. Fitzpatrick appealed to Messrs. Paul and Co., carriers, of Parramatta, to help move my furniture. The firm lent its big motor lorry, and took the furniture from Wentworthville to French's Forest, a distance of thirty-five miles, the men giving their services free on the holiday, and the Imperial Oil Company supplying the petrol free. The roads were in a terrible condition, and the lorry was bogged three times, and the furniture had to be unloaded. The carriers did not mind a bit; they were really splendid fellows. I am very grateful indeed to all who have helped me."

"OUR FLAG."

The flag movement in connection with the Red Cross Society started yesterday. The demand was so great that fresh supplies of "our flag" were called up in the afternoon.

THE UNIONS.

HEALING THE BREACH.

There is now a distinct prospect of the breach between the P.L.L. executive and the State Government over the issue of conscription being healed. That should be good news for everybody. Whatever is to happen at the forthcoming general elections, all parties are doubtless united in the desire that the verdict obtained from the people should be a clear mandate on matters of public polity, obtained after the freest representation of rival policies.

Australia is not a democracy by mere chance. It is so by deliberate choice, and its politicians are chosen under the freest franchise in the world. It is therefore more to be desired than anything else, perhaps, that whenever the people are called upon to speak through the ballot-box, their voice may be heard on clearly-defined political principles. That was the attitude taken by the "Herald" a week ago, when the outlook was much gloomier. And that attitude, in addition to being highly appreciated, has exercised a potent influence on the development of the dispute towards what now looks like a peaceful settlement of the trouble. Commenting editorially on the position, the "Herald" said last week:—"There is nothing they (Liberals and Progressives) could do that would gain their candidates more votes than the action of their opponents. But we hope that on the question of the war there is only one party in the State, a party that is prepared to think of the country first and of politics afterwards. It would be a bad thing for the Empire and its allies if a great party went to the country decrying the efforts of those who are so desirous of putting our fullest force into the conflict, upon the successful issue of which all our privileges rest."

Of course, should the crisis arise, the unions—or, at least, the representatives known as "industrialists," who now control the P.L.L. executive—would only have themselves to blame. For weeks now, they have gone headlong to what looked like certain destruction. It seemed to be no use telling them that they had lost touch with the pulse of the people. They were there, they said, to carry out the behests of the P.L.L. conference, which had declared straight out against conscription. It was an honest attitude, certainly, but its weakness lay in the one solid fact that military matters are purely Federal, and should never be offered for decision at a State P.L.L. conference. There would be just as much reason to blacklist all State Labour candidates who refuse to advocate freetrade, because the State conference had been led into the obvious error of deciding the fiscal question for the Australian Labour party. And the weakness of the position became apparent when the anti-conscriptionists of the executive refused the offer of a referendum, to find out whether or not they were in touch with the people.

Apparently the position now is that the Federal Government has stepped in to claim its rights. The presence of the Assistant Minister for Defence at the last P.L.L. executive meeting bears out the suggestion. This will be the most satisfactory ending of what has been, at best, a miserable squabble quite beneath the dignity of a great party.

But there are some difficulties to be smoothed over yet. The settlement will most likely be an agreement on the part of State Labour candidates to leave the question of conscription alone—whether they be for or against—until the Federal Government makes a pronouncement on the matter. "But, suppose that pronouncement is for conscription," one of the members of the executive was asked yesterday, "what about it then?" "In that case," he replied, without hesitation, "we cannot refuse to honour the State pledge to get behind the Commonwealth on all matters connected with the conduct of the war." At the same time, there is no doubt that these industrialist anti-conscriptionists fervently hope and honestly believe that Australia can and will do her part to bring victory to her own and her Allies' arms without resorting to conscription.

One little matter is causing considerable trouble in the healing of the breach. It is the fact that several of the Ministry, including the Premier, are members of the Universal Service League. The policy of that organisation is undoubtedly straight-out conscription, and at once. It would be as well, perhaps, to put the view of the industrialist on this question of universal service. Frankly, he believes it to mean simply conscription, and nothing else, and he believes also that the title is one dishonestly chosen in order to deceive—to sweeten the pill. To many who have always had quite a different conception of universal service, of course, such a view will appear to be ridiculous. But ridicule has long since ceased to be an effective weapon against the operation of these men's minds. They know little about the principles of logic, as picked up in a University course. Professor Jevons may be quite an unknown name to them. But they know logic when they hear it. Their union and league meetings are largely debating societies. Fresh from the manual toil of their daily bread-winning, they have come to delight in a contest of wits.

So they want to know, "What is this universal service?" It means, of course, they are told, every man and every woman doing something—the thing for which they are best fitted—to help end the war. It means the organisation for national purposes of the whole community. "Good," they say. "That is well put; it sounds well. But what is the first thing to do?" The answer to this has always been, and must always be, "To provide sufficient soldiers to whip the enemy." The unionist will not deny that. For the most part he is a man who appreciates the gravity of the international situation. But he has had to fight all his life, and for everything he has got, so he says, "Right, that seems to be necessary. That's where I come in. I put on the khaki at once. Now, what about all the rest?" And the trouble is that the Universal Service League has not said yet what is to be done with all the rest. The league has been most pronounced on the question of providing the soldiers, but one fails to recall any other definite pronouncement from its leaders and spokesmen. Universal service will take on; it must take on. But it must know what it wants, and what it intends to ask the community, as a community, to do.

This is the last stumbling block which has to be removed before the State P.L.L. executive, with its overwhelming anti-conscriptionist vote, will be content to abandon the "whole-hog" attitude it took up some weeks ago. The difficulty is gradually disappearing. The first step was the statement by the Premier and other members of his Ministry that when they signed the original manifesto of the league they did so as private citizens, and therefore the titles of their official positions had no right to be attached to their signatures.

Summed up, the position may now be stated as follows:—The State P.L.L. executive will tacitly acknowledge that this particular issue is not within its scope of operations or control; State Labour candidates will only be asked to refrain from publicly advocating conscription before, and unless the fiat first comes from the Commonwealth Labour Government; and, finally, if conscription is announced as necessary by the Australian defence authorities, the State pledge to back them up will be fulfilled.

FOOD PRICES.

In the wholesale markets yesterday potatoes and onions both advanced £1 a ton. The best Tasmanian potatoes were worth from £7 to £9, while for Victorian Brown Spanish onions up to £6 was demanded.

Eggs were cheaper than they were last week. New-laid were to be had at from 1s 11d to 2s, and case eggs at from 1s 7d to 1s 10d, according to quality.

LEAGUE OF HONOUR.

Miss Collison, M.A., delivered the first of a series of lectures at the Queen Victoria Club last evening on the subject of "The War and Democracy." This lecture marks the inauguration of a movement to extend the activities of the University tutorial classes to the New South Wales League of Honour. The lecture was really of an introductory nature, and did not touch on the condition of democracy as exemplified to-day. Miss Collison dealt briefly with the social conditions of the Middle Ages under feudalism, passing on in an interesting manner to the upheaval of the industrial revolution, and to the dawn of machine production.

SIX O'CLOCK.

CLERGYMAN'S CRITICISM RESENTED.

STATEMENT BY MR. HALL.

"My attention has been drawn," said the Attorney-General (Mr. Hall) yesterday, "to certain statements reported to have been made at the 6 o'clock thanksgiving service on Sunday afternoon. Assuming that the Rev. Mr. Touchell was correctly reported, then I, for one, bitterly resent his inaccurate statements. That gentleman said the referendum was the most undemocratic piece of legislation that had ever issued from the Labour Government, and every Labourite ought to be ashamed of it. 'We had asked the Labour Government for an Act on lines similar to the South Australian Act,' Mr. Touchell went on, 'but he got out an Act of his own that would go down in history as a disgrace to the Government of this State. We oppose the beer trade, but the bill introduced into Parliament suggested the closing of dining-rooms, billiard rooms, stable doors, and so on.'

"How a clergyman can bring himself to make statements of this kind surpasses my comprehension," said Mr. Hall. "They are wrong in every particular. Either Mr. Touchell knew they were wrong and deliberately uttered them, or else he made these statements with a reckless disregard for their truth or falsehood. The referendum, so far from being undemocratic, showed exactly what the people wanted, and provided that they should get it forthwith. The Government of South Australia never introduced a Referendum Act at all into the South Australian Parliament. It took a referendum, and one year later the hotels were closed, excepting for the sale of wine during dinner, from 6 until 8 o'clock. There is not one word in the Liquor Referendum Act that suggests the closing of dining-rooms; there is nothing in it about closing billiard rooms; there is no provision for closing stable doors. It makes one wonder why the Temperance Alliance, when there are so many fair-minded clergymen who are prepared to rejoice over a victory against the liquor traffic, should deliberately choose a man who forgets his rejoicing in his anxiety to stab the present Labour Government.

"We all know that we have reached a critical time in the history of our movement," concluded the Attorney-General. "Apart from efforts that are being made to secure dissension within it we see a remarkable unanimity on the part of our opponents. No doubt for the next six months all that the wealthy classes can do to defeat the Labour Government will be done. In the meantime Mr. Touchell and a few other men of his type will go on uttering misrepresentations until after election day, and then, having done their utmost to defeat the Labour Government, will probably spend part of next year discussing the question 'Why working men do not go to church.'"

WOOL SALES.

HIGH PRICES SECURED.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

The wool sales were resumed in the local markets to-day, when a two days' series, embracing 10,000 bales, was inaugurated. The catalogues included a number of second-hand wools and oddments generally, but at the same time the selection was by no means a bad one. The chief feature of the sale was the keen demand for the better class of merinoes and fine crossbreds, for which in all instances extreme prices were secured, greasy comeback selling up to 24d, and scoured merino to 36½d. Competition from all sections was keen, that from Yorkshire being a strong factor. When compared with the prices ruling at the end of March those obtained to-day for the better class of greasy merinoes may be quoted as from 20 to 25 per cent. higher; whilst medium sorts were anything up to 15 per cent. dearer, as also were the best fine crossbreds.

MARSINA REFLOATED.

A wireless message received yesterday by Burns, Philp, and Co., Ltd., from their branch manager at Rabaul, stated that the steamer Marsina, which went ashore some days ago on a coral reef in Stephen Strait, had been refloated. The whole of the contents of the vessel, including 150 tons of water ballast, had to be jettisoned.

It is understood that, after the cargo has been reloaded, the Marsina will proceed to Rabaul for a preliminary examination by a diver. She will then come on to Sydney, and is expected to reach here about July 10.

PRESERVATION OF NATURAL SCENERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—From time to time public bodies and private citizens write to me, drawing attention to the fact that some beautiful piece of natural scenery, generally a piece of primeval forest, is about to be destroyed, and I am always pleased when people draw attention to such matters. At the same time, with our large territory and sparse population some pieces of natural scenery have to be destroyed in the ordinary course of things, but a proper balance should be struck between utilitarianism and aestheticism, and I make bold to say that sometimes beauty spots are directly destroyed, or steps are taken which will inevitably result in their destruction, without any corresponding advantage to anyone, as far as one can see.

All the letters that I have received from time to time come from local people, and refer to local happenings. It seems to me that the primary responsibility perhaps rests with the local municipal or shire authorities. If they have not the power to protect their beauty spots they ought to acquire it, or at least they are the people who naturally can best sound the warning note.

It may be in certain cases that the matter should pass beyond the local administration, as it may in some cases become a national cost to be attended to by the State Government.

One or two societies, with their headquarters in Sydney, take cognisance of scenery preservation in their prospectuses, but they have no funds to acquire lands, nor can they do other than propagandist work.

There is an international society, with headquarters in Switzerland, for the international protection of nature, and some time ago the Government appointed Mr. Froggatt, the Government Entomologist, and myself as the New South Wales representatives, but naturally activities are suspended owing to the war.

I am quite aware that it is not easy at the present moment to justify expenditure except directly connected with the war, but a beginning should be made, and I should be very grateful if you will give me this opportunity of inviting public attention to the matter.

In New Zealand we have a Minister for Scenery Preservation, appointed under a special Act of Parliament in the year 1908, and the Premier of the Dominion is at the present time styled in the annual report on scenery preservation as the Minister for Scenery Preservation. Every time I read the admirable reports of that department I wonder why we cannot have such an institution here, for, as the result of a good deal of travel in Australia and some other parts of the world, I assure New South Welshmen that they have some of the most wonderful scenery in the world. The members of the British Association for the Advancement of Science who were out here two years ago emphasised that point.

It wants all the emphasis we can give it, because I have often received the impression from Australians that the only scenery in the world worth making a special trip to see is in California, Japan, or Switzerland; and it is particularly at this time, when so many opportunities of travelling across the sea are out of the question, that Australians should make a point of discovering the wonderful beauty areas—I will not call them beauty spots—of their own country.

CHILDREN AT THE RACES.

A CRUEL PRACTICE.

The "Herald" has previously referred to the cruelty to children of tender years that results from their admittance to racecourses. It has been pointed out that the long-drawn-out programmes at some of the courses necessitates a physical strain of five or six hours, which, even to the most hardened bookmaker or punter, is very severe. Mothers, rather than remain at home, bring their children to the races, and many of the youngsters are just able to toddle. It is a degrading spectacle to see a child being drawn into the vortex of the betting ring by a mother who is intent on backing her fancy at the cost of the comfort of her offspring. When attention was first drawn to this practice a feeble attempt was made by some of the clubs to prevent the admission of the children; but it soon fell into disuse, and the evil to-day is flagrant.

WAR CASUALTIES.

POLO PLAYER MISSING.

The English files to hand announce that Captain Leslie St. Clair Cheape, of the 5th Dragoon Guards, and a member of the famous polo team that brought back the international polo cup to England in 1914, has been reported missing. In the memorable polo contest Captain Cheape played No. 2, and he is the third prominent polo player to meet with disaster on the Western front, the others being Captain the Hon. Francis Grenfell and Captain Noel Edwards. The last-named officer represented England in America in 1913.

RELEASE OF CHIDLEY.

GUARANTEE BONDS OFFERED.

Three representatives of the Chidley Release Committee—Dr. Thompson and Messrs. Parish and Henderson—waited upon the Chief Secretary (Mr. Black) yesterday, to urge the release of Mr. W. J. Chidley, according to the suggestion recently made by Mr. Justice Harvey.

The Minister was told that substantial bondsmen could be obtained as a guarantee that Mr. Chidley would be taken care of, and that he would observe any reasonable regulations imposed upon him.

After discussing the matter, Mr. Black said he would liberate Mr. Chidley on substantial bonds from two responsible gentlemen as a guarantee that Mr. Chidley will refrain from lecturing to audiences comprising children or youths of immature age. He is also to refrain from sending circulars to women, and he is to give a written undertaking on these matters.

TRAIN DERAILED.

ACCIDENT AT RIVERSTONE.

As the 5.40 train from Sydney to Richmond was leaving Riverstone station last night, it jumped the points at the end of the platform on to a line leading to a siding. After travelling along this line for some distance the engine left the rails, overturning a telegraph pole and crashing into the dead-end. The engine and one car were derailed. The passengers were hurled from their seats owing to the suddenness of the stop, but nobody was injured, although several suffered from shock. The cars that escaped derailment were coupled to the engine of the next train, which conveys the products of the Riverstone Meat Company's works to Sydney, and thus the journey was continued to Richmond, the train being about 40 minutes late. Owing to the position of the side-line, traffic will not be impeded to any great extent.

AUSTRALIA.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT URGED.

BRISBANE, Tuesday.

Mr. Tudor, Minister for Customs, addressed members of the Queensland Chamber of Manufactures last night on the protection and development of Australian industries.

The Minister said that, independently of party politics, all Australian citizens were of one mind as to the necessity of finding for our gallant soldiers on their return suitable remunerative employment rather than be forced to the necessity of paying pensions. One thing in particular stood out as a result of the war. Australia must be made more self-contained. She must not be so dependent on other nations. It was important and essential that we should use to vastly greater extent the raw materials we produced—for the manufacture of iron, for instance, we had the essential materials.

WHEAT BOARD.

THE SIXPENCE ADVANCE.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

The Australian Wheat Board met again at the Federal offices to-day. Senator Russell, the representative of the Federal Ministry on the board, presided, and members of the South Australian, New South Wales, and Western Australian Ministries were also present. Further consideration was given to the question of making another advance of 6d a bushel to the farmers, but no decision was come to. The matter will be further considered to-day. It was decided that in the interests of all concerned it would be advisable to continue the present pooling arrangement over next year. At the present time about 1,700,000 tons of the pooled stock of wheat have been sold, and between 900,000 and 1,000,000 tons have been shipped. The accounts of the pool will be formally closed on September 30, but it is not likely that a sufficiently large proportion of the remaining exportable surplus will have been sold by that date to permit any further advance to be made to the farmers. The wheat which has not been sold by that date will be carried forward, and continuous shipments will be kept up until the last cargo has been disposed of, even if that runs well into next year. The Wheat Board has recommended the various State Governments in the wheat-producing States to introduce uniform legislation for the purpose of creating the necessary pooling machinery for next year.

HEAVY RAIN.

SPLENDID FALLS INLAND.

A splendid rainfall has occurred practically throughout New South Wales, light to heavy amounts being recorded in all districts, except along the seaboard, where the rain was only light, and on the North Coast, where the falls were rather scattered.

A particularly gratifying feature of the downpour is the fact that the inland districts and the western slopes of the mountains fared so well. Brewarrina (western district) received 141 points, Boomi (north-west plains) 121 points, Quambone (central west plains) 127 points, Deniliquin (Riverina) 64 points, Inverell (north-west slopes) 122 points, Dunedoo (central west slopes) 114 points, Tumut (south-west slopes) 119 points, Gulgong (central tablelands) 147 points, and Bungendore (southern tablelands) 69 points.

In the metropolitan area, the showers were only light; 10 points were recorded at the Weather Bureau up to 9 a.m. yesterday.

AUSTRALIAN BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The Primate, Archbishop Wright, presided yesterday afternoon at the annual meeting of the Australian Board of Missions, which was held in the I.O.O.F. Temple, Elizabeth-street.

The Rev. J. Jones, general secretary, presented his report, and said the year just passed had constituted a record in the history of the society. The income had been greater, the work done and the success achieved had been larger than ever before, and there was more room for hope than they ever had. The Australian Board of Missions had undertaken and carried out all the initial work of the Torres Straits mission, a missionary, the Rev. John Done, who had done good work in Sydney amongst the Chinese, had been sent thither, and had forwarded most encouraging reports of his work. However, although the financial results of the past year's work had constituted a record, there was still room for greater effort in giving and in working, and he could not help feeling that many of the churches and parishes in the diocese might well do double their present work.

The Primate, in his address, said they had every reason to be thankful for the reports of the work done during the past twelve months. A special influence had been at work in New Guinea, and the bishop of that diocese, in his letters, told him there was no district in which a more Pentecostal feeling was abroad than in this. In Melanesia also there were records of achievements, and the reports of the aboriginal mission at Yarrabah, in Queensland were exceedingly gratifying.

The Archbishop of Brisbane (Dr. Donaldson) spoke upon the work of the Yarrabah mission, and said it was gratifying to him to find that at last words of appreciation had come from the Queensland Government respecting it.

FRENCH NATIONAL DAY.

In connection with the movement which has been set on foot to celebrate the French National Day on July 14, a meeting has been called for to-morrow at 3.30 p.m. in the cloakroom of the Town Hall. Ladies and gentlemen who are prepared to assist in this movement to do homage to France are requested by the president of the French National Day committee, Mr. Neville Mayman, to meet at the time named, and discuss the best means of ensuring the success of a concert which is listed for the night of July 14. Although the primary object of this movement is not the raising of funds, but rather the expression of the appreciation of the people of New South Wales of the glorious stand made by the French in the present world struggle, yet whatever sum is achieved by the effort will be handed to the French Australian League of Help, which has already done such excellent work in assuaging the wounds of France.

BUTTER SUPPLY.

SHORTAGE IN THE COUNTRY.

Referring to the question of butter supplies, the Attorney-General yesterday said that, although his inquiries showed that generally there was sufficient butter in the "street" to meet ordinary city requirements, he was afraid that the same remark could not be made in respect of country wants. Last week-end he had given his approval for the release of 600 boxes of butter from the Government winter store, on the understanding that this should be used by the people releasing it for the fulfilment of country orders; but apparently this quantity did not satisfy the demand, as quite a number of complaints had been made showing that in some parts of the country a shortage still existed.

"We do not put butter into cold storage altogether for the benefit of the city consumer," said the Attorney-General, "and if country storekeepers who are unable to obtain supplies will communicate with me direct I will do my best to see what can be done for them. With quite a normal quantity of butter for June coming to the metropolis each week from coastal ports, and with 9000 boxes in cold store in Sydney, apart altogether from the Government butter, I cannot see any reason why country people should have to go short."

MIROVITCH-PIASTRO CONCERTS.

The Mirovitch-Piastro season, which will close with the farewell matinee to-morrow, was brightly continued at the Town Hall last night, when these distinguished Russian visitors pursued their original art scheme of lengthy classics, followed by minor pieces of a romantic or bravura character.

Mr. Alfred Mirovitch opened with the Schumann "Carnaval," which amateurs hardly need reminding was chiefly constructed on the notes A-S-C-H, in reference to the little Bohemian town of Asch, where dwelt an early flame of the susceptible composer. The composition, which includes a series of fancifully named pieces that are (more or less) variations in different measures, opens abruptly with a preamble. This was formidably presented by the pianist, yet with bright, controlling power, and then he passed through the 20 short pieces, investing with sentiment and distinction the many moods, from capriciously vivacious to dreamily sentimental, which precede the final thunder of the "March of the Davidsbundler against the Philistines." In the second part, Mr. Mirovitch introduced a clever descriptive piece by his fellow-countryman, Borodine, entitled "Au Convent," beginning and closing with the striking of a clock, there was also the suggestion of the tolling of a deeply solemn bell, with a lovely theme, partly in "imitation" in between. This was so rendered by the pianist as to emphasise the nocturnal sadness of the tone-picture as a whole. Arensky's "La Fontaine," clever and graceful, but on conventional lines, was followed by an interpretation of the familiar Liszt "Rhapsodie No. 1." This was marked by a thoroughness in the detail which avoided unnecessary ostentation, yet was still exceedingly brilliant, and the pianist well deserved the cheers with which it was greeted. The double encore was the Chopin "C Sharp Minor Valse," and Brahm's "Little Valse."

Mr. Michael Piastro's classic took the genial form of the Mendelssohn "Violin Concerto." He played the first allegro with all his accustomed energy and animation. Moreover, he excelled in the great cadenza because his complete executive mastery was united with beauty of tone, its depth during the "shakes" being quite remarkable. In the song-like and always touching andante, the artist eclipsed several famous predecessors in the charm and power he exhibited in the double-stopping passages, which suggested a choir of birds vociferous in their sweetness; and he crowned his splendid interpretation by the flying swiftness of his fingering in the final movement. This performance was quite memorable, and there is, therefore, no occasion to recount the young artist's successes later in the evening.

STRIKE OF STEELWORKERS.

NEWCASTLE, Tuesday.

Carpenters, engineers, and other mechanics at the Steel Works declined to work yesterday because they claimed they were entitled to pay at the rate of time and a half on account of the holiday. The management pointed out that while the crafts' wages board award provided for time and a half for holidays, the Prince of Wales' birthday was not a holiday under the Steel Works Wages Board award. Practically all the men returned to work this morning.

FINANCIAL.

COMMONWEALTH AS SHIPOWNER.

PRIME MINISTER'S DEAL.

Mr. Hughes has, so the cables inform us, purchased 15 steamships for the conveyance of the Commonwealth's surplus wheat to Europe, and the price he has paid is somewhere in the neighbourhood of two millions sterling. The deal may be viewed from several points of view. It may be asked:—

(1) Whether this really solves the difficulty that at present faces wheatgrowers and their financial backers?

(2) Whether the deal is actually of benefit to the Empire as well as to Australian producers?

(3) Whether the Federal Government is likely to prove successful in its new role of shipowner?

These queries may be discussed in the order named. First, then, how far has Mr. Hughes solved the problem? At the opening of the season it is estimated that the Commonwealth wheat harvest totalled 175,000,000 bushels, of which, roughly, 3½ million tons were available for export. To-day half the year has gone, and at least 2½ millions of tons are still to be shipped. Mr. Hughes's 15 steamers will provide for the moving of, say, 150,000 tons a trip; or, allowing for three trips a year, for 450,000 tons in all out of 2½ million tons, which should be well out of the way before next harvest is upon us in, say, another six months. So, unless the Government buys still more vessels or gets considerable assistance from private shipowners there is the prospect of our still having anything from 1½ to 2 millions of tons of wheat carried over to next season. It therefore cannot be urged that the Prime Minister has solved the problem. He has merely touched the fringe of it.

The next question is as to whether the deal is really for the benefit of the Empire? In so far as some wheat will be carried from where it is not wanted, to where it is required, it will benefit consumers in the old country, who will thus get bread; and producers and financial institutions here in Australia, who will be paid. But the cables tell us that Mr. Hughes' vessels were practically all already requisitioned by the Admiralty. So they will have to be released from trooping to carry wheat—a doubtful advantage. Had the Prime Minister purchased 15 neutral vessels the case would have been quite different. As it is, he places a heavier burden on one part of the Empire in order to relieve another part.

The third aspect of the case is as to whether the Federal Government is likely to prove an efficient shipowner. Those business undertakings it now manages are badly run. It has bungled the Post Office, and maladministered the Federal capital site business in a way that has probably never been paralleled. If it allows its sailors to take a hand in teaching the navigator his duties, all will not go well with it. Labour has still to learn that one man must be master—not many. When it learns this, its administration will wonderfully improve. While it adheres to rule by the many we will have more Canberra muddling and Post Office inefficiency.

SULPHIDE CORPORATION.

OPTION ON CENTRAL ZINC COMPANY.

The Sulphide Corporation proposes to increase its capital from £962,500 to £1,050,000 in order to exercise its option to purchase the undertaking of the Central Zinc Company, a subsidiary concern, which owns zinc distilling works at Seaton Carew. Originally it was proposed that the works should be purchased for £150,000, with 5 per cent. interest from April, 1915, down to the time of purchase, but as the works were subsequently declared a controlled establishment, a new situation arose. Negotiations carried on by the Central Zinc Company with the Ministry of Munitions at first gave little promise of a satisfactory issue, but recently an arrangement has been arrived at under which a substantial part of the Zinc Company's profits, which would otherwise have gone to the Exchequer under the Munitions Act, is made available for capital outlay, provided that immediate steps are taken to double the capacity of the works. The two companies have now made a provisional agreement, by which the corporation will allot to the Zinc Company 50,000 £1 preference and 50,000 15s ordinary shares, and pay £7500 in cash, together with the 5 per cent. interest payable by the corporation to the Zinc Company's shareholders for the year ended March 31. The cash assets to be taken over materially exceed the cash payments to be made, so that the corporation's cash position will be strengthened by this method of payment. The works, with the enlargement now arranged for, will be capable of treating 80,000 tons of zinc concentrates per annum.

COMMERCIAL.

THE MARKETS.

Most houses are still stock taking, and consequently business remains on the slack side. Houses had no desire to increase their stocks. There will be very little market business done till the next week, when the new half year commences. No change was recorded in metal manufactures, except in lead, sheet being quoted at £33 a ton, and cut rolls at 40/ per cwt. The demand generally was dull for wire netting, barbed wire, and galvanised iron. Rabbit traps were still going out strongly, and the demand for sheep shears improved.

Oils were steady at late rates. First brands of linseed were worth 5/ and 5/2 for raw and boiled respectively, although oil landing was costing 5/8 to 5/9. White lead had sales at £68. Turpentine was unaltered at 4/8 for Pinetree, with some houses quoting 4/7, and for Pratt's 4/11.

The grocery market was quiet. Matches were without alteration. A letter by yesterday's mail from a leading manufacturer stated that since the duty and excise on matches were introduced it has practically meant that the manufacture of matches has taken place in bond, and is now controlled by many Government regulations. These put difficulties in the way of manufacture, and in exporting there is another impediment. It is that export forms have to be filled in before the matches can be shipped from the factory.

A cable was received stating that another advance had been made in the price of a leading brand of stout. Quarts were increased by 9d per dozen, and pints 4½d.

Another cable stated that there had been a farther advance in freights—£1 a ton on weight and measurement.

The country is "standing off" cornsacks, and season's delivery is unchanged at 8/10 net to rails. Woolpacks in all positions are available at from 4/ to 4/1, and branbags are to be had at 5/3.

LONDON METAL QUOTATIONS.

The Australian Metal Exchange reports that the London metal (middle) quotations for June 26 were as follow:—

Lead: Soft, foreign, spot, £29/10/ (unchanged); forward, £28/10/ (5/ down) per ton.

Spelter: Spot, £65 (£1 down); forward, £55 (£1 down) per ton.

Tin: Standard, spot, £173/7/6 (£3/10/ down); three months, £173/17/6 (£3/10/ down) per ton.

Silver: Standard, spot, 31⅝d, a rise of 3-16d per ounce.

The amount of wool which was manifested to arrive at Darling Harbour yesterday was 182 bales.

At Darling Harbour yesterday 1979 tons of wheat and 250 tons of flour were manifested to arrive.

LONDON MARKET CABLES.

LIVE STOCK MARKET.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

In the live stock market to-day 26,200 fat sheep were entered. The actual pennings were, however, short of these numbers, a number of consignments being unable to load through rain. There was a fair attendance of buyers, but the demand was rather dull throughout, prices showing a slight improvement only on the reduced rates ruling at the close of last market. Late in the day values recovered slightly, but the actual close of the market was about equal to opening rates. Quotations:—Prime crossbred wethers, 37/6 to 44/3, extra, to 47/; odd pens to 48/; odd wethers to 52/; good ditto, 33/ to 36/; seconds, 28/ to 31/6; inferior, to 27/; prime crossbred ewes, 35/3 to 39/; extra, to 40/9; odd pens, to 41/9; odd ewes, to 61/; good ditto, 28/ to 33/; seconds, 24/6 to 27/; inferior lower, prime merino wethers, 27/3 to 32/; extra, to 34/; good, 24/6 to 26/; seconds, 22/ to 24/; inferior, from 15/; merino ewes, from 22/ to 28/4; low-conditioned ewes, from 16/5. Fat lambs: 5800 penned, the bulk being useful quality, with a sprinkling of prime. The demand was somewhat unsteady, but prime sorts generally showed an advance in values. Secondary sorts were practically unchanged, and inferior lambs again showed a slight decline. Quotations:—Prime, 27/6 to 35/; extra, to 38/6; odd lambs, to 42/; good, 23/6 to 26/; seconds, 20/ to 22/; inferior, lower.

Butter was well stocked, and there was no movement in the proclaimed rates.

BUTTER BRANDS.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT'S GRADING

"Grocer" writes:—

Sir,—I notice that butter sold by grocers must be stamped "choicest," "first-grade," or "second-grade" as the case may be. But what about the grocer who pays for "choicest" and gets first-grade? There is no mark on the boxes to show what grade he is getting, and, as at this time of the year, all butter is of good quality, he might easily pay for "choicest" and get only first-grade. I think it is time that something was done to protect the grocer as well as the public.

Under the terms of the Dairy Industry Act the interests of the grocer are safeguarded. The Act provides that all registered brands of butter shall be graded.

The following is a complete list of the graded brands:—

"CHOICEST."

Scotch Thistle, Uralba, Laon, Burrawang, Kangaroo, Beech Tree, Emu, Hazel, Baerami, Peachblow, Waratah, Shorthorn, Kooree, Beryl, Clareval, Ululu, Pasteur, Monogram, F.F. and I. (temporary), Ibis, Goden Globe, Pyramid, Skone.

"FIRST GRADE."

Sassafras, Zephyr, Clematis, Durham, Northern Central, Marquis, Kaipara, Countess, Moss Rose, Norco, Wilns, Kara, Meriala, Retruh, Orchid, Sun, Pearess.

"SECOND GRADE."

Doka, Durambol, Mirriga, Wombat, Seaview, Narira, Coorcel, Prairie, Charm, Native Rose, Alfa, Wonga, Clarence, Noorebar, Aurora, Boomerang, Oensy, Hawthorne, Wingham, Cable, Bauhina.

ANOTHER BANANA SHIPMENT.

A shipment of 21,000 bunches of Fijian bananas was in port yesterday, but the fruit will not be available until to-day.

The Tasmanian consignments should be on the market to-day.

Locally-grown fruit was dull, and both oranges and mandarins were easier.

VEGETABLE MARKET.

VALUES GENERALLY FIRMER.

After the public holiday senders had not sent in sufficient supplies to the city vegetable markets yesterday, and owing to this values rose appreciably. In bunch varieties also a few changes took place, and potatoes commanded higher values in sympathy with the upward move along the "street." Quotations for vegetables in season were:—

Cabbages, local, 1/ to 4/; cauliflowers, local, 5/ to 7/6; lettuce, 1/ to 2/ per dozen.

Beetroot, /9 to 1/6; carrots, /9 to 1/6; celery, 2/6 to 3/; herbs, /9 to 1/; leeks, 1/; mint, 2/; parsley, 1/; parsnips, 1/ to 1/6; radishes, 2/ to 6/; rhubarb, /9 to 1/; spinach, /6 to 1/; white turnips, 1/6 to 1/9; watercress, 2/ per dozen bunches.

PIG SALES.

LARGE HEAD WEAKER.

A large supply of 1020 pigs was penned at the City Corporation Yards yesterday, the large majority being porkers. The quality was generally good, and a full attendance of buyers was present. Competition was, however, not so strong for backfatters, baconers, and heavy porkers, while light-weights were generally brighter.

The ruling values were:—

Best backfatters to £7, good £5/10/ to £6/10/, medium £4 to £5, light from £3/10/; best baconers, to £4/10/, good £4 to £4/5/; medium weights £3/10/ to £3/18/, light from £3/5/; best porkers, to £3/5/, good £2/10/ to £3, medium £2 to £2/10/, light £1/10/.

MINING.

A BRIGHT OPENING.

FOLLOWED BY SLACKNESS.

EBB AND FLOW OF METAL PRICES.

The Sydney Stock Exchange opened brightly yesterday morning, so much so, as compared with the gloom which overshadowed it last week, that one concluded the holiday rest on Monday had put operators and speculators in a more cheerful mood. This brighter feeling was evidenced at the first call, when quotations generally showed an upward trend, especially from the buying side.

On top of this came the announcement that private cables showed the London Metal Exchange recorded a recovery of £4 per ton for copper, but that tin had eased 50/ per ton.

On returning to the vestibule, Hampdens, after opening quietly with sales at 30/6, afterwards improved to 30/9. This movement appeared to convince operators the market had bottomed. But this opinion did not last long. After a few transactions were booked in Barriers, Westonias, and tin stocks, the market suddenly turned, and the noon call saw it easier.

The stocks that profited most during the fitful gleam of sunshine were Edna May Deeps and Black Range West in the gold section, Hampdens in the copper division, Kampongs (tin), and B.H. Norths (silver). Just before the close of the day the Edna May Centrals sold at a weak figure.

LONDON, June 26.

BROKEN HILL JUNCTION.

The second annual meeting of shareholders in the Broken Hill Junction Lead Mining Company was held at Vickery's-chambers, Pitt-street, yesterday, Mr. J. G. North (chairman of directors) presiding.

In moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, the chairman referred to the satisfactory result of the experimental contract made last half-year with the Sulphide Corporation to treat 1000 tons of rough-crushed sulphide ore on the share-profit basis. A new contract had been made for the whole output, not exceeding 1000 tons per week, and already this amount was being approached. Prospects generally were excellent. Though they had not declared a dividend they had put out 1030 tons of ore, and paid the whole expenses of the mine for the half-year, and the whole or the interest on the mortgage.

Mr. R. T. Edwards, of Adelaide, who recently visited the mine, said it was within the bounds of possibility that the mine would be on a dividend-paying basis this year. The vicissitudes of the mine in the past had been due to want of proper development. The company was in a fortunate position in having its ore bodies practically proved, at depth, by its neighbours, the British and Junction North mines. An output of 925 tons in a week on two shifts a day for five days had been reached. The previous output just prior to stopping operations was about 1200 tons a week of six days of three shifts.

The report and balance-sheet were adopted. The two retiring directors, Messrs. W. A. Freeman and C. H. Smith, were re-elected.

OUR MINING LAWS.

SOME ANOMALIES.

EMMAVILLE, Tuesday.

Before Warden W. J. Perry yesterday, Lionel Leece, of the Buffalo syndicate, proceeded against Audley Adams, of the Stanthorpe Proprietary Co., for the cancellation of the dam site on the ground that it was held under mining lease, which was not bona-fide mining. Defendant admitted the site was so held, but stated that registration had been granted before the mineral lease was cancelled. The warden ruled that registration had been wrongly granted, and ordered the site to be forfeited.

In another case for cancellation of mineral lease for non-compliance with conditions, the warden ruled he had no jurisdiction to cancel the mineral lease, that being entirely for the Minister. The warden could only cancel mineral claims and tenements. That was an anomaly in the Act, and should be altered. When the Minister called on the lessee to show cause he gave 30 days' notice, so that persons illegally holding mineral leases had ample time to comply with the conditions, and so block a bona-fide applicant. He considered the warden was the only person competent to judge such a matter, as he was on the spot, while the Minister had no local knowledge. The case was dismissed.

The secretary of the Richmond Trotting Club wires that Golden Robin's handicap in the Richmond Hundred is 8s beh.

The annual races of the Walgett Jockey Club, set down for Wednesday and Thursday of this week (wires our local correspondent) have been postponed until August 2 and 3, owing to the rain.

Royal Navy was placed third in the Prince of Wales' Stakes at Rosehill on Monday.

The declaration of weights for the big handicaps of the spring on Monday evening has given ample scope for students of racing, during the next three or four months, to solve the turf problems in connection with Randwick, Caulfield, and Flemington. On public form the burdens seem fairly well distributed, but the exigencies of the training track will gradually reduce the long lists of candidates for the different events. As in previous years, there are numbers of the horses that could not win under the proverbial postage stamp; but, taken by and large, the equine talent that has just passed through the hands of the handicappers, is fully up to the standard of the past; and the difficulties that confront the student in search of winners have not been lessened.

VICTORIAN TRAINING NOTES.

CAULFIELD.

MELBOURNE, Tuesday.

Heavy rain fell early this morning, but it cleared up at half-past 6, and remained fine for the remainder of the morning. All the galloping was done on the grass, which was fairly fast, as shown by the fact that Euretta ran a mile on it in 1m 46s. Lord Dudley and Vibratory ran a mile in 1m 51s, and Sir Prim covered the same trip in 1m 55s. Wallaroo made light of six furlongs in 1m 24¼s. Blind Murphy was just in front of Bibbenluke, with Artillery Bill beaten off, at the end of a mile and a half in 2m 48¼s. Earl Godwin was responsible for a mile and a furlong in 2m 7¼s. Polygamist beat Glenard over nine furlongs in 2m 1s, and the winner had the assistance of Merrimax over the last mile in 1m 49s. Strifeness went steadily. Sea Pink and Avonwort were in front of Defence at the conclusion of nine furlongs in 2m 2s, but none of them was at his top. Meroo beat Orinoco over seven furlongs in 1m 34¼s. Esteemed and Bundong were outside even time for two miles and a half. Westaway bowled along for a mile and a half in 2m 55s. Wisconsin moved nicely for a mile and a quarter in 2m 18s, and he held his own with Campanile over the last six furlongs on the tan. Royal Letters did stout work. Elshon went steadily; and Welback (Tagell) jumped eight hurdles well; while Ungala three-quarter paced.

FLEMINGTON.

Rain fell early this morning, but it fined up at daylight, and the work was completed in fine weather conditions, while there was a good muster of spectators. The tracks were capital going, and there was a lot of galloping and jumping. Queen's Challenger did good striding work on the tan. Flash Jack, who appeared decidedly crampy in action at first, but who improved as he warmed to his work, did useful pacing over a long distance. Bulawarra (Mr. W. G. M'Lean), who looked well after his race at Williamstown, did good striding work over a couple of miles, the last eleven furlongs being covered in three seconds over even time. Boyeo (J. Killorn) galloped eleven furlongs in 2m 35¼s. Royal Precedent (F. Harmer) went right away from Drumanee in a gallop of a mile and a quarter on the tan, comfortably completed in 2m 21¼s. He pulled up well, and is in thorough seasoned condition. El Progresso and Muttagunyah ran a mile on the tan in 1m 55s, and Merungua strode along. War Mist (T. Butler) was fully extended while finishing in front of Short Rain over a mile and a furlong in 2m 6¼s. Winnipeg (G. Lambert) and Parkdale (E. Barker) spurted half a mile in 53s. Booligal, who had been swimming on Monday, was away at walking exercise on the hills, and his trainer (R. H. Frew) reported him as being considerably improved, and as exhibiting a little soreness. Ballista and Canadium did good three-parts pace work over a couple of miles on the inside sand, where Manatta was also swinging along. Becassine, who appeared none the worse for his race at Williamstown, did good striding work on the tan, where Warrawoona went strongly. Coradjil was usefully occupied. Highland Clan and Bonny were swinging along for a couple of miles, getting up to even time pace for the last half-mile. Jack Rice (H. Stuart), who was hanging out badly, and Muuday (W. O'Brien) were well matched for a mile in 1m 51s. Jullundur (W. O'Brien), after swinging along for five furlongs, improved the pace, and completed another eleven furlongs in 2m 35¼s, while he went better than Old Guard (C. Boyd), who joined in for the last mile, done in 1m 50¼s, and ran the final half-mile in 53¼s. He finished very strongly, and the gallop was an excellent one. Dueler ran a mile on the tan in 1m 48¼s, and Silver Lake and Nazzaro were at striding work. Coronatus (P. Cosgrove) did somewhat better than Don Kirk (K. T. Woods) in a school over hurdles, and has now taken very kindly to the jumping business. Rendrock (Mr. W. G. M'Lean) and Battlebolt (P. Robertson) jumped seven fences, including those "in the lane" on the steeplechase course proper, the former shaping very well; while the "pony" was very clever, though the obstacles were rather big for him. Hypo, who is evidently doing well on his racing, and who looks more seasoned than ever he has done, did good sound pace work over a distance, and Uxbridge and Rebel King, after striding along, improved their speed for a mile in 1m 58s, and Uxbridge looks and goes in quite his best form. Royal Alice, who is very fit, covered a mile in 1m 53¼s, but only had pace on for the last half in 53s.

AUSTRALIAN WEATHER.

THE "HERALD" MAP.

The high pressure has made a north-easterly movement during the 24 hours ended at 9 a.m. yesterday, and has lost slightly in barometric values.

The Antarctic disturbance is still very energetic, but it has flattened out considerably, and has therefore lost its straight isobaric type, which is so favourable for good general rains.

This disturbance is only moving at about the normal rate, so that we may still expect further rains over the greater part of the State, with N.W. winds. A cooler change should set in to-day over the western districts.

A new high pressure is over the western districts of the continent, with its centre in low latitude.

Ocean Forecast.—Squally and rough from the Bight eastward. No data from the west.

TEAK INDUSTRY.

ELEPHANTS' DAY PASSING.

"Elephants a-piling teak" were to be seen often enough on the road to Mandalay at the time Kipling wrote the lines, but there have been great changes in the East during the last 20 years, and nowadays most of the actual piling is done by machinery.

Mr. W. R. H. Taylor, a visitor to Sydney from Rangoon, where he is engaged in the teak industry, said yesterday that elephants were still used in many places inland for dragging timber from the forests to the rivers, and for pushing it down creeks to the main streams, but modern machinery methods had been found to be more satisfactory at the shipping ports, and as far as they were concerned the occupation of the elephants was going fast. The true teak forests were confined almost entirely to Burmah and Siam. There was also some teak in Java. The principal use of the timber in India was for house-building of a superior kind, and for the construction of railway coaches, one great virtue being that it was impervious to the attacks of white ants. In England it was used for shipbuilding purposes, especially for decking, while for warships it was used for backing. All the best boats had teak decks.

Our Territorials at Takapau who used "Fluenzol" were absolutely free from Sore Throats. Chemists and Stores, 1/6 and 2/6.—Advt.

HABERFIELD. HABERFIELD.
SYDNEY'S ESTABLISHED GARDEN SCHEME OF HOME-BUILDING.
A suburb supremely placed—away from the noise and dust of the city, and yet within half an hour of the busy man's office—this garden scheme provides a beautiful setting in the ring of residential sites of Sydney. With about ten miles of the lined avenues kerbed and guttered, and all laid out with a careful study of contour, this suburb provides a rebuke to the haphazard method of suburban development. Having controlled matters from the inception we have been able to eliminate all matters which may have been objectionable. The cottages are of an artistic type, soundly constructed, and our large turnover enables us to provide these homes at an astonishingly low figure. We give instances below, but we have others at £920, £1035, £1235, and £1325.
OUR INTEREST AT 5 PER CENT. is unusual just now, and in arranging terms, which we can do on as low a deposit as £30, the weekly payment you arrange covers everything by us.
The following illustrate the type of home we are offering:
(1) A handsome Brick COTTAGE, 3 bedrooms, dining and drawing rooms, all good size, lofty and well ventilated, wide lounge, entrance hall, front verandah tiled, on to which drawing room opens, Italian lights, a spacious wooden verandah at side and rear provides access to breakfast and dining rooms, there is plenty of sleeping-out accommodation. The interior scheme is tactfully executed. [illegible] art mantels, tiled hearth, electric fittings. Electric light throughout, gas, water, sewer. The land is [illegible]. Price is low. We have fixed it at [illegible], and are prepared to arrange terms as low as 25/ per week, according to deposit paid.
(2) On corner block, [illegible] frontage (well situated for professional man), we are offering a unique property containing striking features. Stone foundations, roof, all over with [illegible]. There are five large rooms, some open on to wide [illegible] verandahs. Fitted with linen presses, pantry, [illegible] bathroom, and all domestic appurtenances, to provide a maximum of comfort. The rooms are all lofty and fitted with picture rails, friezes, and art furnishings. Attractive art mantels. The grounds are turfed and flower beds prepared. This property is likely to have a much enhanced value in the near future, and the price is fixed on a cash basis at £[illegible]; we will extend our usual liberal terms at this price on a 5 per cent. basis.
We invite you to Haberfield at any time. Our Office will be open until 6 o'clock this afternoon, and our salesman will afford you every facility to inspect the present homes available on the Estate. Haberfield Booklet sent on request.

HOMESEEKERS AND RENTPAYERS. We build a Cottage on your vacant land 15 per cent. cheaper than anywhere else in Sydney. [illegible] cottage of two [illegible] rooms and wide verandah, [illegible] brick chimney and stove, would cost you from £[illegible] according to the finish required and the position of the land. Larger cottages just as cheap, and if you own the land, or even if the land is only partly paid for, we can build WITHOUT DEPOSIT IN ANY SUBURB according to the amount paid on the land. If you have from £50 in cash, we will buy the land in any suburb you prefer and build a Cottage to your own design according to the value of your deposit. The repayments are very easy, being from 5/ per week, according to the cost of your cottage, and every penny you pay is building yourself instead of the landlord. There are no expenses of any kind and the repayments do not commence until the cottage is completed. We have arranged our system with a special provision for sickness and misfortune, thus giving every man an opportunity of OWNING HIS OWN HOME. You will not go far wrong if you call and see us first, and it costs you nothing. Plans and estimates free.

There are no legal expenses of any kind, and the company draw up plans and specifications free of cost, so that you have nothing to pay until you occupy your home, when your weekly payments commence.
All materials used are of the best quality, AND WE GUARANTEE OUR PRICES ARE AS LOW IF NOT LOWER THAN ELSEWHERE IN SYDNEY.
We are an established, reputable company, and court the strictest enquiry.
We employ our own permanent workmen, and guarantee you satisfaction.

MERELY A "GIRL"— OR A TRAINED ASSISTANT?
The applicants for those positions which are advertised "Wanted, a Girl" out-numbered by many thousands the number of available positions. This is not so when the advertisement indicates trained efficiency to be necessary. A girl who is trained in subjects of commercial value does not find any difficulty at all in getting a position.

WHAT SHALL I SEND TO BILLIE AT THE FRONT?

Asked a little girlie of her mother—Billie being her brother, who had enlisted and gone away.

"Send him a tin of 'REX' LUNCHEON CHEESE," replied the good woman. "He always liked it when at home; besides, it isn't very heavy, and it is of good Food Value."

"Rex" Luncheon Cheese is something a soldier can carry in his kit. It contains the maximum nourishment with the minimum of bulk.

It's a fighting man's food—beyond any shadow of a doubt—being pleasant to the taste and a good keeper under all climatic conditions.

Spreads without Butter, too.
Sold by all Grocers.

A GREAT AND BUSY DAY AHEAD AT SNOW'S MID-SEASON CLEAN-UP OF ROBES, COSTUMES, AND COATS.
